BIBLIOGRAPHY
Sikhism had never been monolithic in its history of over five hundred years. It witnessed the emergence of various sectarian developments, whose roots may be traced as far back as the 16th and the 17th centuries. The most notable dissidents, who staked their claims for the gaddi of Guru Nanak at different times, were significantly the direct descendants of the Sikh Gurus. They included Baba Sri Chand, eldest of the two sons of Guru Nanak, whose followers were called the Udāsīs; Datu and Dasu, the sons of Guru Angad Dev; Mohan and Mohri, the sons of Guru Amar Das; Prithi Chand, eldest son of Guru Ram Das, whose followers were called the Minas; Dhir Mal, eldest son of Baba Gurditta (eldest son of Guru Hargobind), whose followers were called the Dhirmalias; and Ram Rai, eldest son of Guru Har Rai, whose followers were called the Ram Rayias.

Significantly, among all the dissenting individuals and religious Orders, the Udāsīs alone survived as an important religious force to be reckoned with in Sikh history and religion. The Minas, the Dhirmalias and the Ram Rayias were excommunicated by Guru Gobind Singh, who ordered the Khalsa Sikhs not to have any kind of social relations with them.

As is the case of the Udāsīs, their pro-establishment stance as well as their being non-baptized not only perhaps enabled them to continue their missionary work as custodians of the historic Sikh shrines but also helped them escape the state persecution during the 18th century. This probably fetched them more extensive revenue-free land grants (dharmarths) from the Sikh ruling classes, Maharaja Ranjit Singh and his successors, which partially continued to the British times. Moreover, the Udāsī attempts to affiliate themselves with the early Sikh tradition also made them more popular and tolerable to the Sikhs. But during the Singh Sabha days, the Udāsīs were targeted by the Tat Khalsa, as they were very close to Hinduism. The Akali reformers launched their struggle against the Udāsī Mahants for reforms in the Sikh Shrines. In the early 20th century, the Akali-Udāsī conflict, the Gurdwara litigation and legislation, the Udāsīs’s attempts to stake their non-Sikh identity, and lastly, the continuous resumption of their dharmarth lands by the new rulers, gradually led to their weakening position. In all respects, thus, the Udāsīs were virtually on the verge of decline.
I

For the completion of this work, very wide variety of the published and unpublished British records available in the National Archives of India, New Delhi; the Punjab State Archives, Patiala; the Financial Commissioner’s Revenue Records at Chandigarh; Records in the Deputy Commissioner’s library at Amritsar and Jalandhar, available in the form of Foreign/Political Proceedings, Home/Political files, Settlement Reports, Census Reports, District Gazetteers; All India Reporter; Judicial Decisions of Lahore High Courts; and the Judgments of the Privy Councils, have been used critically and judiciously. The Udāsī and non-Udāsī literature and the Panda-Vahi records available at Haridwar, too, have been used objectively and corroborated with the contemporary official sources.

II

The first chapter deals with the early history of the Udāsīs. It contains the history of the Udāsīs from Baba Sri Chand to the annexation of the Punjab by the British. Among the non-Sikh literary sources, the Persian chronicles contain little information for constructing historical biography of Baba Sri Chand. These accounts, however, provide scattered information on the Udāsīs, especially Baba Sri Chand, who lived the life of an ascetic. In the second chapter, the Udāsī Establishments in relation to their numbers, distribution and relative significance have been studied. It brings together the existence, growth and fall in the number of Udāsī establishments. The third chapter deals with the aspect of State Patronage to Udāsī individuals and institutions and the British rulers’s policy regarding the Udāsīs and the extensive revenue-free land grants enjoyed by them during the period of Sikh rule. In the fourth chapter, the administrative structure of the Udāsī institutions has been studied. The fifth chapter explains beliefs and practices of the Udāsīs and their changing attitudes in the colonial period. The sixth chapter covers the literary works on and by the Udāsīs compiled from the 17th to the 20th century. It also highlights their historical value for understanding different aspects of Udāsī history in particular and the history of the Punjab in general. In the seventh chapter the Gurdwara Reform Movement and the position of the Udāsī Mahants has been studied in detail. The aspect of the Akali-Udāsī conflict, the Gurdwara litigation and legislation, and the Udāsīs’s attempts to stake their non-Sikh identity, too, have been discussed. It may be added here that all the non-English words have been italicized and the diacritical marks on them have been avoided, except the word Udāsī, being the main subject of this work.

For the present work, I am indebted not only to my supervisor, Dr. Sulakhan Singh, for his constant guidance and valuable suggestions, enabling me to work to the best of my abilities and capabilities, but also to his family, who always provided me a warm atmosphere during all stages of my work. He guided me in the organization and utilization of the sources in right perspective in an objective manner. I am also grateful to Dr. Harinder Singh Chopra, Chief Librarian, Bhai Gurdas Library, Guru Nanak Dev University, Amritsar, for providing me the opportunity to consult the rare source material relating to my work. My thanks are due to the library staff of the Department of History, Guru Nanak Dev University; Sikh Reference Library, Golden Temple; Sikh History Research Department, Khalsa College, Amritsar; Deputy Commissioner’s Libraries at Amritsar and Jalandhar; the Punjab State archives, Patiala; librarian of the main library of the Punjabi University, Patiala; Library staff of several other Public Institutions, such as the Punjab Civil Secretariat Library and Financial Commissioner’s Record Office, at Chandigarh; Punjab University Library, Chandigarh; the National Archives of India and Nehru Memorial Museum Library, Teen Murti House, New Delhi. Also, I am very much indebted to Dr. K. L. Sachdeva, who inspired me to undertake this challenging work.

I will be failing in my duty if I do not thank my husband, Sardar Dilbag Singh Randhawa, District Commandant, for his constant encouragement and support during the entire period. Unconditional love of my daughters Sargam, Taranum and son Danish always made me comfortable at difficult moments and for which they deserve my heartfelt gratitude and lots of love.
CHAPTER- I
HISTORICAL BACKGROUND

In Sikh history, the term Udāsī firstly refers to the travels or missionary tours of Guru Nanak (1469-1539) and secondly, it signifies an Order of ascetics founded by Baba Sri Chand (1494-?), the elder son of Guru Nanak.¹ Originally, it is derived from the Sanskrit word Udās or Udāsīn, i.e., one, who is indifferent to or disregarding of worldly attachments, or is stoic or a mendicant.² Udāsī, literally means sorrow, sadness, disappointed ones, dejected, withdrawn from worldly concerns. W.H. Mcleod writes that the Janamsakhis, the hagiographical literature of the Sikhs, refer to the word Udāsī denoting the missionary tours of Guru Nanak, possibly because these trends were understood as withdrawal from worldly activities.³ In modern Sikh usage, the term designates an Order of ascetics who revere the Guru Granth Sahib and claim Sri Chand as their founder.⁴ The followers of Sri Chand gradually came to be known as the Udāsīs. They revered Guru Nanak, preached his message, and recited the bani of the Sikh Gurus, yet retained their separate identity. C.H. Payne writes that though for many years, Nanak led life of an ascetic, he did not advocate this practice to others. He taught that the dress of a fakir and acts of penance were not in themselves evidence of a life of purity, and that men could practice virtue while engaged in the ordinary business of the world as well, or even better than they could, by withdrawing to the seclusion of the desert or the mountains.⁵

J.D. Cunningham took serious note of dissent in Sikhism listing over a dozen Sikh sects or Orders including the Udāsīs in his work on History of the Sikhs. Before Cunningham, John Malcolm in his Sketch of the Sikhs, has mentioned Sri Chand and Lakhmi Chand as two sons of Guru Nanak. It is noteworthy that he has wrongly stated that Dharam Chand, as son of Sri Chand, founded the Udāsī sect. In fact, he did not even know that Sri Chand remained celibate throughout his life and Dharam Chand was the son of his brother, Lakhmi Chand. Towards the close of the 19th century, Syad Muhammad Latif wrote that the second son of Guru Nanak, Lakhmi Chand, was blessed with two sons. The other son of Nanak, Sri Chand, became a Fakir (ascetic) and was the founder of the sect called Udāsī. H. H. Wilson, claims the Udāsīs to be the genuine disciples of Guru Nanak, yet they were indifferent to the worldly vicissitudes. According to Wilson also the Udāsī sect was established by Dharam Chand, the grandson of Guru Nanak. It may be noted that both the writers, Malcolm and Wilson, failed to acknowledge the contribution of Sri Chand as the founder of the Udāsī sect, and assigned the honour to Dharam Chand, his nephew.

Max Arthur Macauliffe has understood the Sikhs in terms of Sehajdharis and the Singhs. The schismatics in his views were the Udāsīs, the Minas and the Hindalis. Gokal Chand Narang writes that Sri Chand founded the Udāsī sect and instructed his followers to remain single, to have no fixed homes and to own no property. Indu Bhusan Banerjee has added fresh information on the dissenters and he ascribes the origin of the sectarian developments to the principle of hereditary succession introduced at the time of the pontification of Guru Arjan Dev. He writes that the difficulties of the early successors of Guru Nanak were ‘by no means serious’. The Guru could effectively control the entire organization of the Sangats through the Masands and the ‘solidarity of Sikhism’ was not impaired.\(^{12}\) J. S. Grewal is of the view that Banerjee’s conceptualization of dissent in Sikhism before the martyrdom of Guru Arjan is not adequate. The principle of nomination was never discarded by the nominated successors of Guru Nanak. It can be argued that the idea of the unity of Guruship enabled Guru Ram Das to nominate his son as successor. He introduced the principle of familial succession not to replace the principle of nomination but in addition to that principle. The two principles in combination undermined the strength of heredity which had been invoked by the heirs of Guru Nanak, Guru Angad and Guru Amar Das.\(^{13}\)

Among the Sikh scholars, Teja Singh and Ganda Singh are of the view that the new Order of preachers called the Udâsîs, attained more prominence due to the fact that the Masands had become corrupt. Coming to the later period of the Mughal rule, they reiterate that the Udâsîs alone functioned with the old trust and were found to be very useful as the custodians of the Sikh Shrines. In the darkest days of the Sikh history, when the regular Sikhs were away from their homes or were engaged in fighting, these ‘selfless monks’ kept the torch of Sikhism burning.\(^{14}\)

As is the case of the modern historians of the Sikhs of the Post-Independence period, we find sufficient detail about the Udâsîs in their works on the Punjab or the Sikhs. J.S. Grewal, discussing the phenomenon of dissent in Sikhism during the 17\(^{th}\) century, refers to I.B. Banerjee, who writes ‘The system of Sangats and Masands was supplemented under Guru Hargobind and his successors by several hearths (dhuans) and bounties (bakshishes) in which the Udāsīs were often made to play a prominent part.’ Similarly, W.H. Mcleod has also given useful references to the Udāsīs in his works.\(^\text{15}\) With Sulakhan Singh’s recent work, Heterodoxy in the Sikh Tradition (1999),\(^\text{16}\) we are now in a better position to know more about the Udāsīs in pre-colonial Punjab.

Guru Nanak in clear terms rejected the life of seclusion and withdrawal from the worldly affairs and attached much importance to the family life. His notion was based on the experience, which he had undergone during his life time. He had clearly pointed out the advantages of ‘domestic devotion’. His elder son, Sri Chand, had become an ascetic and he disapproved of it.\(^\text{17}\) He continued his religious pursuits, without caring for the disapproval of his father. The other son, Lakhmi Chand took to a worldly life and his descendants are called the Bedis.\(^\text{18}\) As both the sons did not adhere to the religious preaching of their father, Guru Nanak, the latter decided to nominate Guru Angad as his disciple-successor in 1539.\(^\text{19}\) Thus, the dissent in early Sikhism began when Guru Nanak introduced the principle of nomination to succession\(^\text{20}\), on which was based the cardinal doctrine of the unity and continuity of Guruship.\(^\text{21}\) Of the two sons of Guru Nanak, only the elder, Sri Chand, justified Guru Nanak’s fears, opposed the nomination and became the founder of the Udãsî sect. As the elder son of Nanak, he claimed himself to be the natural heir to gurgaddi. Though he was not installed on the gaddi of his father, yet he was recognized as a ‘leader and prophet’ by the Udãsîs, who refused to acknowledge the successor of Nanak as their guru.

Guru Angad, who used the epithet Nanak in his compositions, declared that the gift of Guruship could be received from the Master and not by nominating oneself. For Bhai Gurdas, succession through nomination was no ordinary succession. Guru Angad’s insistence on the principle of nomination was directed against Sri Chand, who claimed to be the successor of Guru Nanak. Even according to the law of inheritance, Sri Chand was the rightful claimant for gurgaddi and there were many who believed that Nanak’s place should go to him. They refused to accept Angad’s succession and began to create difficulties for him. In order to avoid confrontation, Guru Angad left Kartarpur and went to settle at Khadur Sahib. Guru Amar Das, the successor of Guru Angad, in order to distinguish his sect from the Udãsîs, asked his followers to disassociate themselves from them. Amar Das declared passive and recluse Udãsî to be wholly separate from the active and domestic Sikhs, and thus finally preserved the infant church or state from disappearing as one of the many sects.

Thus, Sikhism from the very beginning had to face dissensions. It witnessed the emergence of various religious groups or sectarian developments.

whose roots may be traced as far back as the sixteenth and the seventeenth centuries. Among them, the most notable protesting for Guruship of the mainstream Sikhism were the Udāsīs, the Minas, the Dhirmalias, and the Ramrayias. Among these, with passage of time, only the Udāsīs rose to prominence and gained more popularity, especially under Sikh rule. Sant Rein, an eminent Udāsī poet of the times of Maharaja Ranjit Singh, refers to them as Nanakbans. They were patronized by the Mughal administrators in the early 18th and by the Sikh rulers in the late eighteenth century. They were more lavishly patronized by Maharaja Ranjit Singh in the 19th century. Hence, 29 The Minas were founded by Prithi Chand (1558-1618) eldest brother of Guru Arjan and son of Guru Ram Das. He desired to be chosen as the next Guru but his younger brother Arjan was appointed. The Minas were founded by Prithi Chand (1558-1618) eldest brother of Guru Arjan and son of Guru Ram Das. He desired to be chosen as the next Guru but his younger brother Arjan was appointed. This embittered Prithi Chand who tried to poison Hargobind, Arjan's only child. Prithi Chand set himself up as Guru in the absence of Arjan and Hargobind, and gained a following. These were called the Minas (dissenters, literally meaning 'uncrupulous scoundrels') by the Guru's real following. During the 17th century, due to their sympathies with the Mughal rulers, the Minas controlled Amritsar. Prithi Chand was succeeded by his son Miharban (1581-1640) who in turn was followed by Hariji who was able to keep Guru Tegh Bahadur away from entering the city. During the 18th century the Minas faded away, and were included in : the five dissenting groups that the Khalsa must reject. These are the Minas, Masands, Dhir Malias, Ram Raiyas and Kuri-mars (those who kill their daughters), or those who smoke tobacco: WWW. Mozilla Firefox; 17-09-2010 time 3.22 pm.

30 The Dhir Malias were the followers of Dhir Mal (1627-1677), who was the eldest son of Gurditta, who in turn was the eldest son of Guru Hargobind. Dhir Mal, missing the Guruship ingratiated himself with the Mughal emperor Shah Jahan. In 1643 he received a revenue-free grant and became a menace to Guru Hargobind by setting himself up as the next Guru, with an original copy of the Adi Granth in Kartarpur. He played a part in making Guru Tegh Bahadur withdraw to the Shivalik Hills.

31 Ram Raiyas were the followers of Ram Rai (1646-87), who was the elder son of Guru Har Rai. Ram Rai changed a word of the Adi Granth, from a hymn that was seen to be demeaning to Muslims at the court of the Emperor Aurangzeb. This pleased the emperor and displeased Har Rai who expelled him. Ram Rai then set up a dera (camp/shrine) in the Dun valley from the grant given to him by Aurangzeb. In the course of three centuries a number of Sikh sects sprang up but most of them have lost their importance- Nirankaris, Nanakpanthis, Niranjanis, Suthra-Shahis, Sanmal-Shahis, Dhir Malias, Sevapanthis, Sat Kartaris, Nirmalas, and others. The Nihangs, Namdhairs and the Udāsīs were amongst the important groups: The Gazetteer of India, The Indian Union, Vol. I, Country and the People, August 1965 (Reprint) 1973, p. 486.

they could establish their akharas not only in the Punjab but also in other parts of the Indian sub-continent.

The Persian chroniclers of the Mughal and Sikh times contain some important information for the reconstruction of the life and image of Baba Sri Chand. A Parsi writer, Zulfikar Ardistani or Maubid’s Dabistan-i-Mazahib; Sujan Rai Bhandari’s Khulas-ut-Tawarikh; Bhai Nand Lal’s Jot Bilas; Rai Chatarman’s Chahar Gulshan; Sayyad Ghulam Ali Khan’s Imad-u-Sa’adat; Bakht Mal’s Khalsa Namah; Khushwaqt Rai’s Tarikh-i-Sikhan; Ghulam Mahy-ud-din’s alias Bute Shah’s Tarikh-i-Punjab; Mufti Ali-ud-din’s Ibrat Namah; Ganesh Das Wadhera’s Char-Bagh-i-Panjab; and Rattan Chand lal’s Khalis Namah find special mention in this context. Among these, Maubid was perhaps the first to take serious note of Guru Nanak and his panth. Whatever he wrote in Dabistan-i-Mazahib about the Sikhs was based upon the information supplied to him by the Sikhs themselves. According to him, the sons of Guru Nanak had been living in the Punjab. They were called Kartari. But he does not mention their names. Raghubir Singh states that the term ‘Kartari’ has, no doubt, several meanings but in the given historical situation, it refers to a sect founded by a son of Guru Nanak, probably Sri Chand. The account also throws light on the fact that there existed two kinds of Orders i.e. one of the house-holders and the other of the ascetics. It was believed by the Udāsīs that Guru Nanak himself started the two gaddis, one was given to the house-holder Angad and the other to the celibate Sri Chand.34

Sujan Rai Bhandari’s Khulas-ut-Tawarikh (1697) deals with the general history of India from the earliest times to Aurangzeb’s accession to the throne. In this account there is an incidental reference to the Sikh Gurus. Raghubir Singh writes that it seems probable that Baba Sri Chand had turned a recluse even during the life time of Guru Nanak, and hence, he could not attract much attention of the chroniclers. Moreover, in this context, Bhai Nand Lal's Jot Bilas, Budh Singh Arora's Risala Dar Ahwal-i-Nanak Shah and Ghulam Hussain Khan's Siyur-ul-Mutkharin are notable.\(^{35}\) Thus, very little information is available on the early life of Sri Chand in the Persian chronicles.

Most of these accounts agree that Sri Chand had turned ascetic. Though there is no direct information about the relations of Sri Chand with the Sikh Gurus, yet the accounts do indicate that, to some extent, he had compromised with them, from the time of Guru Ram Das onwards. The fact of popularity of the Udāsīs among the Sikh Sardars of the late eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries is obvious that they enjoyed a lion's share from the dharmarth grants.\(^{36}\) The accounts of Ganesh Das and Khuswaqt Rai contain several references to the Udāsī establishments situated in and outside the Punjab. Khushwaqt Rai’s observation that 'this world is full of the Udāsīs’ is sufficient to prove that they had adequate numerical strength during his times.\(^{37}\) Thus, the Udāsīs’s predominance in Persian literature of the nineteenth century, sufficiently demonstrates their existence and popularity in the Punjab.\(^{38}\)

Moreover, for the purpose of reconstruction of historical biography of Sri Chand, some Udāsī and non-Udāsī works are available which include Pritam Das Nirban’s Udāsīn Sampardaya (1921), Pandit Brahmanand Udasin’s Guru Udasin Mat Darpan (1923), Randhir Singh’s Udasi Sikhan di Vithya (1959) and Pandit Shiv Ram Das Udasin’s Udasian Da Sacha Itihas (1961). The general works on and by the Udāsīs, including some biographical works of Baba Sri Chand, consist of Lachhmi Devi’s Lachhmi Hulas Sagar (1916), Jiwni Baba Sri Chand (1919), Bhai Buta Singh and Partap Singh’s Janamsakhi the products of the Udãsîs’s strained relations with the Akali Sikhs during the early decades of the 20th century. Obviously then, these works were written with some purpose and reflect sectarian bias and hence, they contain very little authentic information on the life and mission of Baba Sri Chand.

On the whole, thus, not much primary source material is available regarding the actual events of the life of Sri Chand. There are many myths and fables relating to his religious life and experiences which have been given much space by the Udãsîs in their religious literature. He lived for more than a century, and led most of his life in seclusion. It is said however, he had contacts with the Sikh Gurus from time to time. An attempt, therefore, has been made to construct the history of Sri Chand on the basis of the extant religious texts.

Baba Sri Chand was born on Bhadon Sudi nine of Samvat 1551 i.e. 1494 A.D., at Sultanpur Lodi in Kapurthala district of the Punjab.39 His mother Sulakhni

was a great lady who did all she could to help him achieve his goal. Guru Nanak Dev, shared his experiences with Sri Chand at his very early age, stating mostly personal examples. Thus, as a child, he formed the habit of rising early, bathing and spending long hours in meditation. He was told religious stories and was exposed to sermons to which he listened to very attentively. In 1501 A.D., when Sri Chand was seven years old, Guru Nanak Dev left for his first missionary tour or Udāsī. Sri Chand was placed under the care of Bebe Nanaki, Nanak’s elder sister. He visited Pakhole and Talwandi also, to meet his grand parents. After two years, he was invested with the sacred thread (yajnopavita), and was formally initiated into the Vedic literature by Pandit Hardayal. At eleven years of age, he was sent to the famous school of Acharya Purshottam Das Kaul in Srinagar for a comprehensive study of the spiritual texts and here he remained for two and half years.

When Guru Nanak returned after completing his first Udāsī, he found Sri Chand, a lad of fifteen, very firm in his principles and fully devoted to meditation. During his brief stay at Sultanpur, before leaving for the second Udāsī, Guru Nanak gave maximum time to Sri Chand and blessed him with Nam as his first disciple. On return from the second Udāsī, Guru Nanak advised him to study Vedas and other Shastras, Indian holy books, to continue his religious education, though both sets of grandparents wanted him to enter business, in accordance with the family tradition. When Guru Nanak Dev returned from his third Udāsī, Sri Chand composed Arta in praise of his father. Sri Chand visited Dawarka in Gujarat, and also travelled to Kashmir, Chamba, Sindh, Baluchistan, Kabul, Kandhar, Tibet (Kailash), Mansarovar, Nepal, Bhutan, besides Assam (Kamarupa) and Puri in the east and Somnath in the West delineating the principles of true dharma and spreading the message of love and peace. In 1546 A.D., he visited Mecca and preached the message of humanity among the Muslims of the West Asia.\(^{43}\)

On return from his fourth and final Udāsī, Guru Nanak Dev wore the dress of a family man and removed his Udāsī attire.\(^{44}\) Sri Chand begged to be blessed and asked for his worn Udāsī dress. Nanak blessed him with Udāsī dress as he thought him to be worthy of it.\(^{45}\) Sri Chand took a vow to maintain its sanctity till his end.\(^{46}\) The records of the Bhatt (bards) claim that he died at Kiratpur (Jan 13, 1629), while the Udāsīs believe that he vanished into the forests of Chamba after giving his last sermon to Brahmaketu, his ardent disciple from Bhutan.\(^{47}\) Lakhmi Chand, the second son of Guru Nanak, led a family life and a son Dharam Chand was born to him.\(^{48}\)

Great personalities of those times like Emperor Humayun, Akbar, Jahangir, Kamran and King Yaqub of Kashmir sought the blessings of Sri Chand. The noted scholar K.M. Munshi writes that Maharana Pratap sought Sri Chand's blessings to fight against Akbar. Jahangir also sent his men along with elephants to bring Sri Chand to his palace at Kadrabad now Nanakchak in Gurdaspur district. On refusal, the Mughal emperor himself paid a visit to Baba Sri Chand.\(^{49}\)

Secondary works in abundance are available to construct the history of the Udāsīs. The little information which one can gather from these sources is that Sri Chand wore long hair, wandered as a naked hermit (naga sadhu), and established his separate sect called the Udāsīs. He had strained relations with the second and third Guru of the Sikhs. The only information that we gather from the third Guru is his submission to his followers not to have any relations with the Udāsīs.

After forty years of Guru Nanak Dev’s death, Sri Chand laid aside his old enmity towards the successors of Guru Nanak and tried to pacify Guru Ram Das, the fourth successor of Nanak, and cordial relations developed between the two. Guru Ram Das, keeping in view his age and relation with Guru Nanak, went to receive him and offered sweets and greeted him with five hundred rupees. The ice was broken and congenial relations developed between the Udāsīs and the Sikhs. This was the turning point in the life and philosophy of Baba Sri Chand. The fifth Guru, Arjan Dev went to see Baba Sri Chand at Barath in Gurdaspur in 1590 A.D. Two places associated with the memory of Guru Arjan Dev’s visit to Barath exist even today, a pillar, where he took rest and the Gurdwara Manji Sahib, about a mile away where he stayed for the night. Guru Arjan discussed with Sri Chand, the behaviour of Prithia, about the compilation of Guru Granth Sahib and about the scarcity of water in the Taran Taran sarovar. Sri Chand blessed him success and gave him some hand written scriptures and advised him to collect some others from his maternal uncle Baba Mohan. For the holy tank, he gave a vassal full of water from his baoli, to be poured into Taran Taran tank. This incidence proves two things, one, that gradually amicable relations developed between Sri Chand and the Sikh Gurus. Secondly, Sri Chand had reconciled to the system of nomination of Guru, as started by Guru Nanak Dev. Guru Arjan Dev was the third son of Guru Ram Das, as such the right of inheritance should have gone to Prithia. The conduct of Prithia was not appreciated by Guru Ram Das.

and he preferred to nominate his youngest son Arjan Dev to gurgaddi, baring first two. Baba Sri Chand approved of this nomination.

The same kind of geniality continued between Sri Chand and Guru Hargobind, the sixth Guru of the Sikhs. Guru Hargobind went to see Baba Sri Chand at his solitary place. Baba Sri Chand complimented him on his bravery in war against the Muslims. This brought a complete change in Baba Sri Chand’s thinking and he went to see Guru Hargobind at Kiratpur. He expressed his desire to adopt Guru Hargobind’s son, Baba Gurditta. According to the Sikh chronicle, Suraj Parkash by Santokh Singh, the sixth Guru Hargobind came to Barath Sahib for a darshan of Baba Sri Chand. He offered his eldest son, Gurditta, as a disciple to Baba Sri Chand. Gurditta was married and was eleven years old at that time. To mark the adoption, Baba Sri Chand gave a cap to young Gurditta. He also handed over the Matre (incantations) and a necklace and confirmed the unity of Sikhism. This settled the long lasted division and separation between the two. Guru Hargobind sent the Udāsīs into the Hills to spread Sikhism. It brings us to the conclusion that Baba Sri Chand accepted the spiritual and temporal ethnicity of Sikhism. The adoption of Gurditta, goes to prove his acceptance of the concept of householdship, as preached and practiced by Guru Nanak. Sri Chand built a memorial of his father by salvaging the urn containing his ashes and burying it at a place which developed into a town known as Dera Baba Nanak. The successors of Guru Nanak Dev held him in deep reverence.

Among the works attributed to Sri Chand are Arta (in Sanskrit arti) Sri Guru Nanak Dev comprising ten padas/couplet in honour of his father; Guru Gayatri meant for recitation; Sahansrnama (lit. thousand named) in praise of the supreme being and matravani, comprising thirty nine dvipadas and is a terse presentation of the Udāsī philosophy. He is also said to have written commentaries on the Vedas, the Upanishads and the Vedanta sutras of Veda. A small shrine having the statue of Baba Sri Chand, lies at Pakhoke Randhave, near an old tahli tree (Sheesham), mythologically linked to the Udāsī preceptor.56

The term Matra, literary means a measure or quantity, or the length of time required to pronounce a short vowel. But the term has acquired an extended meaning in the Udāsī tradition, signifying an incantation or sacred text. An Udāsī Matra is the sacred formula addressed to the disciples, as counsel and advice.57 There are considerable number of Udāsī Matras attributed to Guru Nanak, Sri Chand and Baba Gurditta, as well as to Almast, Balu Hasna and Bhagat Bhagwan, the heads of some Udāsī Orders discussed in the following pages. But the Matras attributed to Sri Chand have special significance for the Udāsīs and are highly cherished by them. The Matras vary in number as several of their versions are available in Gurmukhi, Hindi and Devanagri. In these compositions, Baba Sri Chand has laid emphasis on the inner qualities of life, rather than on the outward appearance and symbols.58 The Matras of Baba Sri Chand, the Udāsīs believed, were in no way of less spiritual power than the Japuji of Guru Nanak, a clear indication of their heterodoxy against the orthodox beliefs of Sikhism, where the Japuji of Guru Nanak holds primary position in the Sikh scriptures and the codification of the Adi Granth is unquestionable.59

Baba Sri Chand, thus, lived for more than a century and spent most of his life in the Punjab which was part of the Empire of the Lodhi Afghans and later on of the Mughal rulers. It was a time when society was facing religious and moral degradation and expectantly, Sri Chand’s socio-religious ideology must have been influenced by the given socio-religious milieu.\(^6^0\) He founded seats of culture and centers were established for propagation of his ideas at a number of places.\(^6^1\)

Early Udāsīs established four Dhuans (smouldering hearths), which became active centers of their missionary work.\(^6^2\) Each Dhuan came to be known after the name of its principal preacher: Almast, Balu Hasna, Goinda or Goind Sahib and Phul Sahib. Gradually, they became zealous preachers of Sikhism and carried its message to the far off corners of the country and perhaps beyond. They rediscovered places which had been visited by the Gurus and which had fallen into obscurity with the passage of time.\(^6^3\) The Dhuan of Bhai Almast, flourished in the eastern parts with head quarters at Nanakmata and branches among several other places at Dhaka, Patna, Jagannath Puri and Nainital; the Dhuan of Bhai Balu Hasna gained influence in western parts of the Punjab and the Kashmir. The headquarters of this Dhuan were found established in the Punjab at Charankaul, near Anandpur; the Dhuan of Bhai Goind or Gonda came up in southern parts of the Punjab popularly called the Malwa region with its most famous cetres at Shikarpur and at Sangalwala in Amritsar; and finally the Dhuan of Bhai Phul sahib in the Doaba i.e. the tract between the rivers Beas and Sutlej.\(^6^4\) Unfortunately, adequate contemporary information is not available on the functioning of these Udāsī centers and the lines of successions of the early Udāsīs of the Dhuans. Some information, however, may be found on them in the late nineteenth and early twentieth century Udāsī literature, besides a few references in the medieval Punjabi literature and other sources of the same period.

The first Order of the Udāsīs belonging to four Dhuans arose with Almast a term which denotes the enthusiast. In view of a later Udāsī writer, Brahmanand, Almast was born in 1553 A.D. at Srinagar in the house of Kashmiri Gaur Brahman.65 He was a close associate of Sri Chand, known popularly by his first name Kamalyia. He is believed to have settled at Nanakmatta in Uttar Pradesh with the blessing of Guru Hargobind.66 It is said that Almast prepared a long list of the preachers. He made them learn Gurmukhi. At that time learning Gurmukhi was compulsory for every new entrant in the Udāsī sect.67 Out of those who adopted the Udāsī sect under his influence the most prominent eight were: Bhai Makhu Chand, Bhai Natha, Bhai Akalwand, Bhai Hamira Das, Bhai Garib Das Vadde, Bhai Garib Das Chhote, Bhai Lachman Das and Bhai Mangoo Das. Seven of them were sent to different directions to propagate Udāsī tenents and Bhai Makhu was appointed by Almast as Mahant of the famous establishment at Nanakmatta. Those who succeeded him in turn at this center include Makhu Chand, Bhai Mitha, Bhai Gurdas Dakhani, Bhai Nand, Bhai Kirpal Das and Bhai Narain Das. Bhai Gurdas Dakhani, in 1698 A.D., wrote Rehat Nama or code of conduct for Udāsī Sadhus and named it as Matra Udas Sampardaya.68 Bhai Natha associated with this premiere or parent centre is said to have established its branch at Dacca in West Bengal in 1643.69 Brahmanand Udasin claims

Almast visited Gaya, Bihar and Orissa and had established Dharmsalas over there. The caretakers of these Dharmsalas were the Udāsī Sadhus of Chando Shah, who was the follower of Bawa Gurdas Dakhni. At Patna, when Baba Ganga Das (the eighth generation from Ajit Mal, the seventh follower of Almast) visited the house of Prabhu Das in 1885 A.D\footnote{Loc. cit.}, Prabhu Das donated his residential place for the establishment of DharmaSala and later on the Sadhus of the family of Prabhu Das kept managing this Dharmsala. In Uttar Pradesh at Paryag, Sadhu Kirpal of Almast Dhuan established a Dharmsala and in his absence Mehar Das took care of it. At Kashi, Dharm Das (who belonged to the twelfth generation of Mangoo Sahib, the follower of Almast) in 1901 A.D, established a Dharmsala at Pudhani. Makhu Chand (second Mahant of Nanakmatta) sent Lachhman Das to Lucknow, to establish a Dharmsala over there. Dharmsalas were also established at Patiala, Nabha, Jind, Faridkot, Malerkotla and Nalagarh. Bawa Gurdas Dakhni sent his follower Khyali Das in 1698 A.D, who established a Dharmsala at Longowal. During the period of Sikh rule a Jagir was also allotted in the name of this DharmaSala. DharmaSala of Dirbha Pind also belonged to Dhuan of Almast.\footnote{Randhir Singh, Udasi Sikhan Di Vithia, pp. 118-22.}

Under this Dhuan, the centers of Udāsīs were established in Bangla Desh, Uttar Pradesh, Punjab, Pakistan, Multan and Sindh. Among its followers one hundred and nineteen Mahants remained Bairagi (celibate) and thirty were Grihasti Mahants (house holders).\footnote{Sita Ram Chaturvedi, Bharat Ke Udasin Sant, Akhil Bhartiya Vikram Parishad, Kashi, 1967, pp. 9-56; Also see, Randhir Singh, Udasi Sikhan Di Vithia, pp. 119-125.}
Balu Hasna was the younger brother of Almast. He was born in samvat 1621 i.e. 1564 A.D. His early name was Bal krishan. Sarup Das Bhalla writes that Balu Hasna received the title of Hasna from Guru Hargobind as a reward for his services rendered to him and his son Baba Gurditta.\textsuperscript{76} Baba Gurditta adopted Balu Hasna as his disciple in 1636 A.D.\textsuperscript{77} The latter appointed him as a head of the dera at Kartarpur.\textsuperscript{78} Among his disciples, Bawa Jado Rai and Bawa Puran Das, are well known.\textsuperscript{79} The headquarters of the Balu Hasna was established at Charankaul in the Punjab.\textsuperscript{80} Balu Hasna Dhuan had forty five branches in Bihar.\textsuperscript{81} Balu Hasna died at Dehradun in 1660 A.D.\textsuperscript{82} An eminent Udāsī poet, Sant Rein, belonged to the Dhuan of Balu Hasna. It had ninety nine Grihasti and three hundred and four celibate or Bairagi Mahants.\textsuperscript{83}

Phul Sahib was the younger brother of Goind Sahib. He was born on 1573 A.D. In 1637 A.D., he was appointed head of this Dhuan. The headquarters of the Dhuan of Phul Sahib were found located at Dera Charan Shah, Bahadurpur in Hoshiarpur district.\textsuperscript{84} The dera was established in 1643 and with the passage of time, it became one of the most important centre of the later Udāsīs.\textsuperscript{85} Mahant Charan Shah Nirban was the first disciple successor of Phul Sahib at this dera. He was succeeded by Nanak Shah, Bawa Dhakni Shah and Sri Gurbaksh Shah in turn.\textsuperscript{86} To the gaddi of this dera, Mahant Gobind

Das succeeded his Guru Gurmukh Das after his death in 1848. Later on, this dera enjoyed revenue-free land grants worth Rs. 1108 per annum from the Sikh rulers. It had 70 celibate (Bairagi) Mahants and 16 Grihasti. Phul Shah died on 1730 Samvat i.e. 1673 A.D. at Bahadurpur in Hoshiarpur. Five centres of Phul Sahib Dhuan, existed in Bihar.

Goind Sahib was born in Khatri family of Srinagar, to parents Lala Jai Dev Das and Subhadra Devi. At the age of thirty he was appointed by Baba Sri Chand in 1636 A.D., as head of Kiratpur Sahib Dhuan. He is known to have a considerable number of his disciples of whom Bawa Kamal Nain was well known for his missionary activity. Pandit Brahmamanand Udasin writes that, the bakhshish of Mihan Sahib was linked to this Dhuan through Bawa Kanwal Nain and Bawa Nand Lal Sohna. The centers of this Order were found established at Sikarpur in Sindh. Another famous Udāsi Akhara of this Order was established in the city of Amritsar. The Udāsīs of this Order claim several of their centres established in the states of Patiala, Nabha and Malerkotla, besides a few in the district of Ludhiana. On the whole, all the Udāsī centers affiliated to various Dhuans are claimed by the Bara Akhara established by Mahant Pritam Das in the late 18th century as the progenitor of this central Udāsī organization. Goind Sahib died in 1649 A.D., at Phillaur.

The Panchyati Akhara established thirty six Dharamsals at Patna out of which

Besides the four Dhuans, there emerged another set of Udāsi seats called six Bakhshishes and ten sub-Bakshishes,97 which flourished during the time of Guru Hargobind, Guru Har Rai, Guru Teg Bahadur and Guru Gobind Singh.98 A Bakshish (lit bounty) was a missionary assignment conferred upon an individual by the Guru. There were six prominent bakshishes viz Bhagat Bhagvanie, Suthreshahie, Sangat Sahibie, Mihan Shahie (so called after Mihan); Bakh Mallie and Jit-Malie. The saints of Bakshishes travelled widely and established their Deras, Sangats, and Akharas in distant places throughout India. The Udāsīs preached the message of Guru Nanak and revered and recited the bani of the Gurus, yet they retained their separate identity. Baba Sri Chand did occasionally visit the Gurus who treated him with respect for being a saintly personage as well as for being a son of Guru Nanak. However, after Sri Chand admitted Gurditta to his sect, the Udāsīs began to receive support and guidance from the Gurus. Guru Hargobind’s successors conferred bakshishes upon Udāsī Sadhus.99 Bhagwan Gir, founder of the Bhagat Bhagwanias, was born in 1499 A.D. He was a Sanyasi Sadhu of Panchal Desh (of Purab and Bihar). He came in contact with Guru Har Rai. He was closely associated with Mehar Chand, son of Dharam Chand. This association made him adopt Udāsi Bhekh and Baba Dharm Chand named him Bhagat Bhagwan. Hence, the Bhagat Bhagwanias trace their foundation to Guru Har Rai. The followers of Bhagat Bhagwan are known as Nanak Shahi Saints also. Puro ji, Narain Das, Badri Das, Ram Sahai were his Guru Bhai and others like Tika Ram, Bakhat Mal, Shyam Sagar, Sangat Das, Lal Das, Darbai, Durga Das, Jagat Ram were his followers. It is said three hundred and sixty followers of Bhagat Bhagwan became Udāsīs. Bhai kahan Singh Nabha has made a reference to three hundred and seventy centres of this Bakhshish in the North. Fateh Singh, a follower of Bhakat Mal of Bhakat Bhagwan’s Bakshish, established a dharamshala at Patna in 1705 A.D. In Bihar, the famous Centres of Bhagat Bhagwan Bakshish are at Chatra in District Hazaribagh, established in 1638 A.D by Baba Sobha Ram, disciple of Badri Das and at Daud Nagar, in District Gaya, established in 1637 A.D by Baba Dharam Murat, disciple of Badri Das.

The followers of Mihan Sahib claim their association with Guru Tegh Bahadur. It may be significant to mention that Mihan Sahib was not connected with either Baba Gurditta or Sri Chand. Both Major R. Leech and Giani Gian Singh trace his origin from Guru Tegh Bahadur whom he is said to have served in the langar. The dera Bawa Magni Ram was very famous centre of Santokh Singh and Giani Gian Singh both mention Jit Mal and Bhagat Mal as the missionary agents of Guru Gobind Singh.\(^{110}\) It may be added that the Udāsi followers of the bakhshish of Sangat Sahib claim their links with the Chhota or Nayyan Akhara founded by Santokh Das in the early 19th century.\(^{111}\) Such links of the Udāsis with the rest of the Bakshishes, however, are not known.

One of the five sons of Bibi Veero, Jit Mal, was the head of Bakshish called Jit Malie. The main centre of this Bakshish was located at Fatehpur. Significantly they were working as the Masands to propagate Sikhism.\(^{112}\)

Suthre Shah\(^{113}\) had the blessings of Guru Har Rai. He was born at Bahrampur village, near Baramullah in Kashmir, to Nande Shah Khatri. It is said that he was born with teeth in his mouth. His parents left him thinking it to be a bad omen for their family. Guru Har Gobind took him in his shelter and named him as Suthra. Later on, he is said to have served Guru Har Rai also.

The followers of Sangat Sahib (also known as Sachi Dahri or Bhai Pheru) were known as Sangat Sahibias. This Bakshish was being managed by Bhai Pheru. He was born in 1640 A.D, at Ambmari in Mian ke Mor Pargana Punjab States Gazetteers, Phulkian States, Patiala, Jind and Nabha, 1904 Vol. XVII, p. 78; Also see, Sulakhan Singh, Heterodoxy in the Sikh tradition, p. 20; Punjab Census 1901 (report) p. 134.

in Punjab. He became the follower of Guru Har Rai who named him Pheru.\textsuperscript{114} He was given the title of \textit{Sachhi Dahri} and was blessed by Guru Har Rai and Guru Gobind Singh. The followers of Bhai Pheru were Charan Das, Chukha, Khan Shah, Brindaban, Jagta nad Bhagta. They all served Guru Gobind Singh.\textsuperscript{115} Bhai Vasudev of the Sangat Sahibia \textit{Bakshish} established a \textit{dharmshala} at Patna in Loongola Mohalla, during the period of Maharaja Ranjit Singh in 1835 A.D. It had nine other centres at Patna in Bihar: Dharmshala Bhai Prem Das, Mohalla Begam Pur; Dharmshala Mahant Ram Kishan Dass, Sati Chowra; Dera Mahant Gopal Dass, Maru Ganj; Dera Mahant Aaya Ram, Siri Ghat; Dharmshala Bhai Prem Dass, Siri Ghat; Dharmshala Mahant Brahm Dayal, Nausak Ghat; Dharamshala Mahant Bhrigu Das, Mahavir Ghat; Asthan Bhai Ram Parkash, Khusro Pur, Nivada; Dharmshala Mahant Jamna Das at Chhatua Ghat.\textsuperscript{116}

In Major Leech’s view, Bhai Pheru had received the title of Sangat Sahib from Guru Har Gobind in return for his unconditional service to the \textit{Guru Ka Langar} at Nakka region of the Punjab. In Giani Gian Singh’s view, he was formerly a \textit{masand} of the Sikh Gurus and became the founder with the blessings of Guru Har Rai.\textsuperscript{117} \textit{Panda Vahi} records mention Sangat Sahib as a disciple of Guru Har Rai and his visit to Haridwar in 1707 A.D. along with his forty two \textit{chelas} of whom Narain Das, Charan Das and Brindaban were relatively more influential.\textsuperscript{118} The headquarters and majority of the centres of this \textit{bakshish} were found established in the districts of Lahore and Amritsar.\textsuperscript{119}

\textit{Bakht Malia bakshish} was blessed by Guru Gobind Singh and was being managed by Bakht Mal. According to Bhai Kahan Singh, he was the \textit{Masand} of Kabul, whom Guru Gobind Singh had forgiven.

Thus, we find that several of the Udāsī Mahants are remembered with esteem in the Sikh tradition. For instance, there are the famous Bhagat Bhagwan, Bhai Pheru of the Sangat Sahib Order, who had served the langar in the time of Guru Har Rai, and Ramdev (later on known as Mihan Sahib), who was originally a Mashki or water carrier in the service of Guru Teg Bahadur and who had received from him for his devoted service the title of Mihan (bestower of rain) as well as the dress and marks of an Udāsī consisting of seli (woolen Cord), Topi (Cap), Chola (hermit’s gown) and a Nagara (drum). Ram Dev established his own Order of the Udāsīs which came to be known as Mihan Dasie or Mihan Shahie.

Another notable Udāsī sadhu was Mahant Kirpal who took part in the battle of Bhangani (1689) under Guru Gobind Singh. After the abolition of Masands by Guru Gobind Singh, the preaching of Guru Nanak’s words fell to the Udāsīs who also gradually took control of Sikh places of worship. When Guru Gobind Singh evacuated the fort of Anandpur along with his Sikhs, an Udāsī monk, Gurbaksh Das, undertook to look after the local shrines such as Sis Ganj and Kesgarh Sahib. After the death of Guru Gobind Singh, one Gulab Rai, proclaimed himself Guru at Anandpur and tried to take possession of the Shrines but Gurbaksh Das thwarted his scheme. Gurbaksh Das’s successors continued to look after the Anandpur shrines till their management was taken over in recent times by the Shiromani Gurdwara Prabandhak Committee. At Nanded, where Guru Gobind Singh passed away, Mahant Ishar Das Udāsī performed the services at Darbar Guru Gobind Singh (Hazur Sahib) and managed shrine from 1708 to 1725 AD. He was succeeded by his disciple.

Gopal Das Udāsī, who remained in-charge of Darbar Hazur Sahib upto 1746 AD. Gopal Das was succeeded by his disciple Saran Das Udāsī, who served the Shrine for a long period of thirty years. After Saran Das, the control of the Darbar passed into the hands of the Sikhs who had, by that time, come from Punjab in considerable numbers and settled at Nanded.¹²⁵

In 1711 AD, an Udāsī Sadhu, Mahant Gopal Das, popularly known as Goddar Faqir, was appointed Granthi at Harmandir at Amritsar by Bhai Mani Singh, and was sent to Amritsar as a custodian of the shrine of Mata Sundari. Gopal Das was later on replaced by another Udāsī, Bhai Chanchal Singh, a pious and devoted Sikh.¹²⁶

In I.B. Banerjee’s view the system of Sangats and Masands was supplemented by Guru Hargobind and his successors by way of adding more missionary centers in the form of Dhuans (hearts) and bakhshishes (bounties) under the command of some prominent Udāsī personalities of the 17th century, as leaders of these centres.¹²⁷ A mutual understanding is believed to have reached between the Udāsīs and Guru Hargobind. In an Udāsī work of early 19th century, Udāsī Bodh, Sant Rein represents Baba Gurditta as the re-incarnation of Guru Nanak to claim back the Udāsī bhekh from Sri Chand and then Guru Nanak (in the form of Gurditta) bestowed this bhekh upon Almast, Balu Hasna, Goinda and Phul Sahib.¹²⁸ Thus, an attempt was made by the Udāsīs to throw the clock of legitimacy over a development that took place during the pontificate of the sixth Sikh Guru.¹²⁹

To recapitulate, it may be stated that the Udāsīs who trace their spiritual descent from Baba Sri Chand, emerged on the scene of Sikh history in the 16th century. As an Order of ascetics, they practised renunciation (Udāsi) and asceticism, quite contrary to Guru Nanak’s social philosophy. Sri Chand himself remained a celibate throughout his life span of over a century. As he did not adhere to the religious preaching of his father, Guru Nanak, the latter nominated Guru Angad as his first disciple successor in 1539 by surpassing Sri Chand’s legal claim in accordance with the law of primogeniture. Though Sri Chand’s relations with Guru Angad and Guru Amar Das remained strained, but later on, he seems to have developed cordial relations with Guru Ram Das, Guru Arjan Dev and Guru Hargobind. Moreover, Baba Sri Chand is believed to have passed the Udāsī’s line of succession to Baba Gurditta, the eldest son of Guru Hargobind. But, it is difficult to uphold this claim of the Udāsī as no certain date of the death of Baba Sri Chand is available. It is further believed that Baba Gurditta established the four Orders of the Udāsīs, called the dhuans (hearth) which came to be known as the adi-Udāsī. Thus, the earliest known Udāsīs are the Udāsīs of the dhuans of, Almast, Balu Hasna, Goinda or Goind Sahib and Phul Sahib. The Udāsīs of these Orders became zealous preachers of Sikhism and carried the message of Guru Nanak to far off places, which had been sanctified by the Sikh Gurus, especially Guru Nanak himself.

Besides the four dhuunas, there emerged six bakhshishes (bounties) and various sub-bakhshishes during the pontificates of Guru Hargobind, Guru Har Rai, Guru Tegh Bahadur and Guru Gobind Singh for the expansion and consolidation of the Udāsī movement. The Udāsīs of the dhuans and the bakhshishes travelled very widely and hence established the Udāsī dera or the akhara in distant places in and outside the Punjab. They primarily preached the message of Guru Nanak and revered and recited the bani of the Sikh Gurus. However, it may be noted, that the terms dhuans and bakhshishes do not in any way imply the organizational unity among the Udāsīs of various Orders.
Moreover, adequate contemporary information is not available on the functioning and the lines of successions of the various Udāsī centres affiliated with the dhuans and the bakshishes. Some limited information, however, may be found in the late nineteenth and early twentieth century Udāsī literature, besides a few references in the medieval Punjabi literature and other contemporary sources of the same period.
CHAPTER II

UDĀSİ ESTABLISHMENTS

The word establishment has been used for Akharas, Deras, Darbars, Dharmsalas, Samadhs and the Gurdwaras which were under the control and management of the Udāsīs.¹ Many of these establishments were known by the names of their Mahants. These institutions served as centers of religious, cultural and educational activities. They also provided food and shelter to the visitors as such they were popular with the native people.² Benevolent attitude of the Sikh rulers helped the Udāsīs grow in numbers and soon a large number of establishments grew up within and outside the Punjab by the middle of the nineteenth century. Sulakhan Singh, in his recent work on the Udāsīs, has given in detail their position in regard to their establishments, before the annexation of the Punjab by the British.³ He has identified about two hundred and fifty Udāsi centres existing and flourishing during the period of Sikh rule. The position of the Udāsi centres in the colonial Punjab has been studied in this chapter especially in regard to their numbers, distribution and relative importance.

After the annexation of the Punjab, there was a sudden change in political, social, and religious affairs of the state. The new rulers, the British, introduced new administrative set up replacing the old rulers and bureaucracy. The introduction of new administrative pattern affected the society as a whole and the Sikhs in particular, who were considerably deprived of their acquired power and prestige. The liberal state patronage which the Udāsīs had been enjoying earlier, dwindled away. In the beginning, not much change was noticed on the religious front, but its effects could be seen in the following years. The new administrators first of all studied the social and religious aspects of the people and did not interfere with it, as they feared backlash. They knew well that the religion was a sensitive issue for the masses and in the beginning they very largely let the system of revenue-free grants to continue as it was, on, they started utilizing the state machinery to turn the socio-religious organizations into their mould. Gradually, they started reducing and in some cases totally withdrew the land grants, allocated by the earlier rulers. The shift in their policy affected many religious organizations and the Udāsī the most, as they were the major recipients of such grants during the Sikh rule. From the time of the British occupation of the Punjab, a steady decline in the numbers of the Udāsī establishments as well as change in their organizational set-up is easily discernible.

II

As is the case of the Udāsī centres, there are two major works, Guru Udasin Mat Darpan (1923) by Brahmanand and Udasi Sikhan Di Vithiya (1959) by Randhir Singh, the latter wrote at the behest of the Shiromani Gurdwara Prabandhak Committee, which provide considerable information on the changing position of the Udāsīs in the colonial period, especially in regard to their establishments. Besides, there are the published and unpublished British Records and the Panda Vahi Records which provide us information regarding the state of affairs of the Udāsī establishments under the British.

Before the establishment of the Sikh rule in the Punjab, the number of the religious structures of the Udāsīs, known as the Deras, the Akharas, as well as the Dharmsalas and the Gurdwaras, increased from nearly a dozen to fifty by the close of eighteenth century and to two hundred and fifty by the mid 19th
The Udāsi establishments were found largely concentrated in the districts of Amritsar, Ferozepur, Ludhiana, Lahore, Jullundur, Gurdaspur, Gujranwala, Sheikhpura, and Sialkot. In some of the districts their number was not more than one. Early British records available in the National Archives of India clearly show maximum concentration of the Udāsi establishments in the districts of Amritsar, Ferozepur, Ludhiana, Lahore, Jalandhar, and Gurdaspur.

If we look at the district-wise position of the establishments, the archival records show that the total number of the Udāsi establishments, with different nomenclature, in Amritsar was thirty, whereas the Panda Vahi records give the number as twenty one in the same district. Out of the total eighteen Udāsi Akharas found in the Punjab, about a dozen (thirteen) were found situated in Amritsar alone during the period of Sikh rule. The most prominent of these were the Akharas of Baba Santokh Das, Pritam Das, Balanand, Tahal Das, Ghumand Das, Bipaksar, Kashiwala, Ganga Ram, Odit Narayan, Chhattewala, Nirbansar, Mastram and Karamdas.

The British Documents mention the existence of about one hundred and twenty Dharmsalas in the Punjab. In Amritsar, their number was less than a dozen. Also, there were the Gurdwaras, the Asthans and the Samadhs, which were in the custody of the Udāsī Mahants. The most famous were Asthan Rorguru Guru Arjan (Balak Ram,), Gurudwara Makhowlal (Murli Das), Samadh Ram Das (Baba Budha), Charan Das, Gurudwara Bargaswar (Balak Ram), Gurudwara Baserke (Ram Das Mohan Singh), and Dera Chola (Guru Arjan, Puran Das). The total number of such centers was only six.11

The official sources mention the existence of about twenty five Dharmsalas belonging to the Udāsīs in the district of Ferozepur alone by the first half of the nineteenth century12, whereas Panda Vahi records refer to nine Dharmsalas only.13 They also indicate the existence of one famous Udāsī Shivdoo Temple at Dharmkot, besides another religious place at Kot Kapura, but its nature is not mentioned.14

There were only five dharmsalas in Gurdaspur district situated at Dharamkot Bagga, Batala City, Kherah, Jalalchuk, and Shri Hargobindpur.15

Thus, according to the British records, there were twelve Udāsī religious establishments in the Gurdaspur district, whereas the Panda Vahi Records mention only two Dharmsalas at Dharmkot Bagga.

The British Documents mention a dozen dharamsalas in Jalandhar, whereas Panda Vahi records mention six only.\textsuperscript{19} The only shrine at Kartarpur was of Mast Ram.\textsuperscript{20} Similarly, the existence of two dozen dharamsalas was found in Ludhiana district, whereas Panda Vahi records mention only six.\textsuperscript{21}

Samadh, a Darbar and a Temple. The total number of Dharmsalas in Jhang was five. In Gujarat, there were three Udāsī centers; an akhara, an asthan and a dharmsala. The only dharmsala at Dera Ismail Khan was of Baba Sital Das. The only samadh at Jhelum was of Arbel Singh and the only Akhara at Kapurthala was of Gurdial Landala.

The other district with major concentration of twenty three Udāsī centres was Lahore. It had eleven dharmsalas, eight deras, an akhara, a temple, a samadh and a ground to its name. Shahpur had three Dharmsalas. Shekhupur had four dharmsalas and three darbars. Sialkot had two dharmsalas and two darbars. Panda Vahi Records mention one dera each at Lahore and Sialkot. Montgomery had a dera Bhai Phuman Shan and a dharmsala Katcha Puccha. Multan and Shahabad were having one Dharmsala each at Lacchman Chowka and Charepur Sahabad respectively.

The Udāsī Institutions which had come up during the first half of the eighteenth century and had continued to develop during the reign of Maharaja Ranjit Singh and afterwards, included the akharas, the deras, the asthans, the thakardwaras, the gurdwaras, the darbars, the temples and the samadhs. However, the institution called dharmsala outnumbered all of them. Even, the Panda Vahi Records confirm the existence of sixty three dharmsals in the Punjab,\(^{31}\) with Amritsar leading the other districts with twenty one dharmsals to its credit.\(^ {32}\)

The reasons for constructing the maximum number of the dharmsalas, must have been there, because such centres acted not only as shelter for the visitors and travellers but also provided food to them. This benevolent act served the task of preaching the religious doctrines as well. It is not known whether these dharmsals charged the visitors or not, but going by the nature of the Udāsīs religious practices, it seems that the visitors willingly, might have been contributing to the institution of Langar. The doors of the dharmsals were open to all the people without any religious bias. The documentary sources indicate that the Udāsī sadhs often visited these places along with their disciples.\(^ {33}\)

Both the unpublished archival and the Panda Vahi sources mention that the total number of the dharmsals in the Punjab during the first half of the nineteenth century was over one hundred and eighty.\(^ {34}\) The Panda Vahi records mention only the dharmsalas and the deras, whereas the British records mention the existence of eighteen akharas, besides other thirty seven institutions like the dharmsalas, the deras, the asthans, the thakardwaras, the gurdwaras, the darbars, the temples, the samadhs and the shrines.\(^ {35}\)

32 The total number of deras according to the Panda Records in the Punjab was two.

33 During the interview, Mahamandleshwar Swami Surinder Muni of Naya Akhara Haridwar, informed that Mahants have to travel from one place to other as it is part of their religious discourse: 4-02-2011 at Panchvati, Dehradun.

34 According to the combined list of British Documents and Panda Records the number of dharmsals was 119 + 63 respectively which comes out to be 182.

35 British and Panda Records brings us to the conclusion that there existed 182 (dharmsals) + 18 (akharas) + 37 (other institutions) + 2 (deras) the total of 239 institutions.
The other sources, published British Records, such as the Census Reports, District Gazetteers and Settlement Reports, mention only one dera at Gurdaspur and one at Hoshiarpur respectively. There were only two Udāsī Shrines at Hoshiarpur, only one Akhara at Gujranwala, two Dharmsalas at Gurdaspur and two at Rawalpindi. There was one Udāsī Langar building at Village Heran in Jagraon Tehsil of district Ludhiana; another Udāsī establishment was Ber Baba Nanak at Sialkot town. The total number of Udāsī centers was twelve, out of which the number of Dharmsalas was five, Akhara one, Deras two, shrines two and one Langar building and an Udāsī establishment Ber Baba Nanak at Sialkot.

The emergence of large number of the dharmsalas indicate the upcoming of the Udāsis as a sect during the nineteenth century. Nearly fifty percent of the total Udāsī centers were in the country side. In cities like Amritsar, Lahore, Sialkot, Gujrat, Gujranwala and Batala, the size of centers was much larger. However, the largest proportion of the Udāsī centers was in the core region of the dominions of Maharaja Ranjit Singh in the upper portions of the Jalandhar, Bari and Rachna Doabs. New centers were coming up in newly conquered areas. About seventy five percent of the Udāsī centers were found in the districts of Amritsar, Lahore, Gurdaspur, Gujranwala, Sheikhupur and Jalandhar. Over sixty establishments were found located in the districts of Ferozepur and Ludhiana. Udāsī centers were established in the territories of other Sikh rulers or even outside the Punjab. The States of Patiala, Nabha, Jind, Faridkot, 36 The establishments found before the time of Ranjit Singh were mostly in cities like Amritsar, Lahore, Batala, Gujranwala and Gujrat, whereas the establishments that came up during time of Ranjit Singh and his successors were situated mostly in the county-side in villages: Sulakhan Singh, Heterodoxy in the Sikh tradition, p. 25 fn. 10.

38 The best known deras in the Patiala state are the deras of Bharam Sarup at Pail; the dera of Sukham das, whose Samadh is also revered, at Sirhind; the dera of Bhai Nama whose Samadh is also worshipped at Longowal; the dera of Avdhut and Thulewal; that of Barham Deo at Katron; that of Ram Das at Ladha; and that of Bawa Bhrham Das, whose Samadh is also revered at Raesar. At Barnala is the Dera of Balram and the samadh of one of his, chelas, Bawa Dyal Das is also worshipped. At Tasoli (in Banur Tehsil) is the Dera of Tahal Das; at Nabha in this state is the Dera of Sant Das, and at Banur of Santokh Das where Malerkotla also had a considerable number of the Udasi establishments. In Patiala State, the number of establishments was over a score.\(^{39}\)

The Udasi Deras and Akharas which had come up before the establishment of Maharaja Ranjit Singh’s rule enjoyed the largest dharmarth grants. The majority of the establishments newly patronized by Maharaja Ranjit Singh and his successors were the dharmsalas which enjoyed grants of rather small value, though they constituted more then 70 percent of the total establishments.\(^{40}\) The Udasi establishments spread into the districts of Gujrat, Sailkot, Jhang, Ludhiana, Shahpur, Multan, Khangarh and Dera Ismail Khan. But the number of Udasi centers in these new districts did not exceed one score. Nearly eighty percent of these institutions remained concentrated in the old districts. The Udasi centers adding hardly a few more to their numbers continued up to the British times. However, they developed more, both in numbers and area, under Maharaja Ranjit Singh, as they flourished more under the 18th century Sikh rulers than under the Mughals.

The majority of these centres established during the 19th century, traced their origins to the past. But a few linked themselves with one or another Dhuans, whereas majority of them linked themselves with the Udasi bakhshishes.\(^{41}\) For example, more than a hundred establishments were found associated with the bakhshish of Bhai Pheru or Sangat Sahib and about a score of establishments were associated with the bakhshish of Mihan Sahib, Bhagat

Bhagwan, Jit Mal and others.\textsuperscript{42} \textit{Dera Fakir Udāsīan} is not the only such example, still there existed several other centres which were not affiliated to either a \textit{dhuan} or a \textit{bakhshish}. The Revenue Records of Jhang tehsil and district of the year 1946-1947, mention a \textit{dera} as \textit{Dera Fakir Udāsīan}. The \textit{dera} was in the name of \textit{Mahant} Thakur Das son of Tara Chand. \textit{Mahant} Thakur Das was having a vast property in the fourteen villages in the name of \textit{Dera Fakir Udāsīan} during the Sikh rule.\textsuperscript{43}

On the whole, the \textit{Udāsī} establishments may be divided into three categories: (i) centres established by the \textit{Udāsī Sadhs}; (ii) centres at places associated with the Sikh Gurus; (iii) centres connected with the personalities associated with Guru Nanak. The first category included the \textit{akharas} and the \textit{samadhs} of the \textit{Udāsī Mahants}. The second consisted of old Sikh Shrines associated with Guru Nanak, Guru Ram Das, Guru Arjan Dev and Guru Har Gobind. The third category consisted of the places associated with Sri Chand, Baba Buddha and his descendants. It is obvious that the \textit{Udāsīs} established their control over some of the most important centers of the orthodox Sikhs during the period of the Sikh rule. They also established centers at places which had certain degree of sanctity in the eyes of the orthodox Sikhs. However, there were many establishments and village \textit{Dharmsalas} which were founded by the \textit{Udāsīs} on their own initiative at places which had nothing to do with the Sikh past. The \textit{Udāsī} Orders and their establishments were more prominent and influential than any other religious Order of the Sikhs under the Sikh rule.\textsuperscript{44}

The Udāsī institutions found established before the establishment of the Sikh rule, included the akhara of Baba Santokh Das, the samadh of Baba Mihan Sahib, the Dera of Bai Pirthi, the Dera-i-kalan and Dera-i-khurd of Bhai Pheru and the Dera of Bhai Phuman Shah. The earliest of these akharas were the Dera-i-kalan of Bhai Pheru at Khan Ke Morh in tehsil Qasur of district Lahore and the Samadh of Baba Mihan Sahib at Sohian in Gujranwala district. The Dera-i-kalan was founded by Bhai Pheru. The Samadh was founded by Lakshmi Das, the first disciple-successor of Mihan Sahib who is believed to have been a contemporary of Guru Tegh Bahadur and Guru Gobind Singh. Both the establishments came to have a large following known respectively as Sangat Sahibias and Mihan Sahibias. Important branches of these centres developed in the districts of Lahore and Amritsar.

Amongst those Udāsī centres which flourished during late 18th century the prominent were the akhara of Pritam Das, the shrines of Sahib Ram Kaur and his son Sahib Anoop Singh, the Darbar at Nankana Sahib, dera at Nankana Sahib, the dera at Alpa, the akhara at Gujrat and the dharmshala at Rashidpur and Noonar. Most of them continued to receive Patronage from Maharaja Ranjit Singh and his successors. They were found located in the districts of Amritsar, Lahore, Gurdaspur, Sheikhupura, Gujrat, Jhang and Sialkot. Founded in the second decade of the 18th century, the Dera-i-kalan of Bhai Pheru was one of the oldest and most venerated institutions in the Punjab.

Under Maharaja Ranjit Singh and his successors a considerable number of new centres came into prominence in the old districts in the early 19th century. The number of new establishments in the new districts of Dera Ismail Khan, Khangarh, Multan and Shahpur was rather small. The old Udāsī centers flourished more during this period, because they had continued to receive a considerable number of fresh grants under Maharaja Ranjit Singh and his successors, besides the old ones being invariably confirmed. Several of the new establishments of this period had enjoyed grants worth over 500 rupees a year. Among these were the akhara of Mahant Balanand and akhara of Mahant Ghamand Das in the city of Amritsar and the akhara of Baba Sant Das in Gurdaspur.

This establishment received Patronage from the Mughals and the Sikh rulers and also from Qardars, Lambardars and Zamindars. Many grants that it got in late 18th century, were confirmed by Maharaja Ranjit Singh and he also added fresh grants. By the end of Sikh rule, it was enjoying revenue free grants worth over 6500 rupees a year. In the 1760’s, this establishment enjoyed donations received from the Zamindars. Bhai Gurditta and Mahant Tehl Das had received grants from Sardar Lehna Singh Bhangi and Sardar Ram Singh Nakai in 1785 and 1798 respectively. The revenue free grants enjoyed by this dera exactly amounted to 5602 rupees a year. Bhai Pheru and Mrhants Tahl Das, Bhai Gurditta, Ram Das, Bhai Gurmukh and Dhian Das were the regional grantees who had enjoyed grants left to them by their predecessors. Bhai Pheru is said to have enjoyed grants from the Delhi emperors, received in 1693: see Foreign/Political Proceedings, 27 May 1853, No. 202, case 32.

In his work Guru Udasin Mat Darpan, published in 1923, Brahmanand Udasin has given a long list of the Udāsī establishments in the Punjab during the early decades of the 20th century. The first chapter of this work deals with the rise of the Udāsī. In the second chapter, he writes about the meetings between Baba Sri Chand and Guru Arjan Dev. He has given a detailed account of the Udāsī establishments scattered at different places in more than a hundred pages. The third chapter, describes Guru Nanak’s tour as an Udāsī. Brahmanand tries to prove Guru Nanak as a part and parcel of Udāsī movement. In the fourth chapter, the praise is lavished upon the sadhus in general. The fifth chapter is sort of a biographical sketch of Baba Sri Chand. Significantly, the Sixth chapter has been exclusively devoted to the Nankana Sahib tragedy. It also gives in detail the circumstances responsible for the decline of the Udāsī. The seventh chapter is about the Udāsī Matre, dhuans various bakshishes and sub-bakshishes. However, here, we are concerned with the second chapter of this work that contains details regarding the Udāsī establishments and the question of their status in the changing historical situation.

Brahmanand gives the list of about eighty one Udāsī establishments in the Punjab with their numerical strength varying in different districts or at different places. However, the core area of the Udāsī establishments was found located in the districts of Amritsar, Ferozepur, Ludhiana and Gurdaspur.65 About forty four establishments, such as Asthans/Akharas/Deras, have been mentioned by Brahmanand in the district of Amritsar, which were generally affiliated to different Udasi organizations, with Sangat Sahibias alone having nearly twelve Udasi establishments.66

The case studies of some of the famous Udasi centres, as given by Brahmanand, may help us to understand the changing position of the Udasis and their centres during the period of Akali-Udasi conflict. In the city of Amritsar, Akhara Brahmbuta in the Golden Temple premises in a corner was established by Baba Santokh Das, disciple of Bhai Pheru. He was succeeded by Apbraham and Brahm Hari.67 Baba Balanand established Akhara Baba Balanand in 1787. Guru Granth Sahib was daily recited here along with the worship of Hindu deities Rama and Krishna. Mahant Hari Prasad was managing the establishment in 1923. On inquiry it was found that Mahant Chander Parshad served as Mahant of this centre till 1982. He was succeeded by Mahant Taran Parshad, who is the present incumbent.68 Nirbansar Akhara was established in 1788 by Pritam Das. It is related to Mihan Sahib Bakshish.69 Nirban Adwait Narayan established Kashiwala Akhara in 1789 in Mohalla Durga Kund, Amritsar. It was also famous as Akhara Baba Mela Ramji.70 Akhara Chhatewala was established by Mahant Magni Ram in 1786.71 Baba Ghumanda Das established Beriwala or Ghamanda Das Akhara. Randhir Singh in his work, \textit{Udasi Sikhan Di Vithiya}, published in 1959, has also provided ample information on the Udāśī establishments in the Punjab during the British period. He deals with Udāśī panth and Guru Nanak and tries to prove Baba Sri Chand and the Udāśīs as Sikhs. He also discusses about Dhuans and Bakshishes and the establishments in detail. Tracing the very beginning of the Udāśī Establishments, he informs that Guru Amar Das started the celebration of the Baisakhi festival. The tradition was further continued by Guru Ram Das with the addition to the celebration of Diwali. After the completion of Harmandir Sahib in Ramdaspur, it became the permanent seat of the Guru.\textsuperscript{109} Soon people from far off places started visiting the city, especially on celebrations, and the place got importance as a business hub. The need was felt to construct buildings to house the visitors and pilgrims and it led to the establishment of many Dharmsalas, Akharas, Asthans, Gurdwaras, Bungas and Deras etc.

Randhir Singh has given the list of about one hundred and twenty three Udāsī establishments in the Punjab with thirty nine establishments at Amritsar alone. In other districts their number was found reasonably good. Since the times of the Sikh rule and until the time of British administration, about twenty six Dharmsalas, ten Akharas, two Deras and one Asthan developed in Amritsar. In this endeavour, the efforts of Udāsī Mahant Prem Das from Dhuan of Almast, resulted in the creation of four dharmsalas in Amritsar: dharmsala Baba Kalyan Das in Lunmandi (presently known as Namak Mandi), Daharmsala Baba Dyal Das, dharmsal Baba Mehr Das and Asthan Sama at Katra Ramarhia near Brahmbuta Akhara in Amritsar. In 1824, Mahant Santokh Das established a dera in one corner of the Harmandir premises and started Langar over there. Later on it came to be known as Brahmbuta Akhara. Another important Dera during Khalsa Raj was established by Sant Hira Das at village Gandiwind in district Amritsar. During the British times, this Dera continued to flourish and later on it was overtaken by the Shiromani Gurdwara Prabandhak Committee.

Sant Hira Das of village Gandiwind established a Dharmsala at Lunmandi Amritsar in 1874, where the pilgrims used to come and stay and were served langar. The other important Mahants of the Dharmsala were Sant Das, Nihal Das, and Chetan Das. Antar Das of Balu Hasna Dhuan established a Dharmsala at Lunmandi in Amritsar which came to be known as Dharmsala Sangalwali. Tarlok Das, Basambar Das and Shri Ram Das served as Mahants of

Randhir Singh provides the list of ten Akharas in Amritsar. Sant Ganga Ram Nirban of Balu Hasna Dhuan, established a Chitta Akhara at the outskirt Darshini Deori in Guru Bazar, Amritsar, during Sikh rule which continued to serve the community even during British rule and developed into a large establishment where many people used to come and stay. Pritam Das established Akhara Sangalwala in 1781 A.D. at Amritsar. He was succeeded by Brahmnij, who was further followed by Nitanand, Parmanand Charan Das, Budh Parkash, Hiranand, Sant Das. The Akhara served as an important Udāsī centre even during the British times and still stands there. In the year 1959 Mahant Amritanand was looking after the Akhara.\(^{115}\) The Akhara is situated just opposite a Darbar Sahib. A stairway with a thick iron chain (Sangal) leads to its entrance. The other eight Akharas of Amritsar were Akhara Brahmbuta, Bibeksar, Ghumanda Das, Nirbansar, Balanand, Kashiwala, Tehl Das, and Chhatewala. The two deras were Dera Gandiwind and Dera Gur Arjan Sarhali. The only Asthan mentioned was Bagichi Bagta Sahib Bibeksar. Similarly, Randhir Singh provides a large detail about the Udāsī institutions existing during the British rule in the Punjab including the areas of Ferozepur, Gurdaspur, Jalandhar, Ludhiana, Lahore, Patiala, etc. He gives details of seven establishments in Ferozpure. At the outskirts of village Dhoorkot Ransingh was a pond named Chundiana, was occupied by the Naga Sadhus and as such it came to be known as Dhoorkot Chundiana. The Udāsi sadhu of Balu Hasna Dhuan established a Dera at this site. It also owned a Dharmsal situated inside the tehsil and owned 77 bighas and 15 biswas of land. The Shiromani Gurudwara Prabandhak Committee managed this dera in 1950’s. Kauni was situated at tehsil Muktsar in district Ferozepur. Lot Phattewale Balu hasnia Sadhus constructed a dharmsal at this place. Gurmukh Das was known Udāsi Sadhu of the dera, who recited the Guru Granth Sahib regularly. He was succeeded by Hari Prasad. Randhir Singh significantly, discusses different changes which had come up in Udāsi cult during the early phase of the twentieth century.

Another Udāsi Dharmsal was found established at Kabarbachha in Ferozepur by Gurdial of Goind sahib dhuan. The Sadhus of this Dharmsal helped in the propagation of Udāsi cult by missionary work and philanthropic activities. A Dharmsal had also come up at village Khirkianwala, Muktsar tehsil in Ferozepur. This dharmsal was constructed by Sadhu Bhagwan Das in 1888. He came and settled in this village much earlier and started preaching the people there. Soon he was able to earn a good name and reputation among the masses. The list of the famous Sadhs of this dharmsal was Tika Ram, Tula Ram, Lal Muni, Garib Das, Sangat Das, Roora Ram, Ram Das, Surtram, Charpat Das, Kusal Das, Ram Saran, Seva Das, Kam Das, Subha Ram, Kaul Das, Bawa Bhagwan Das, Brahm Das and Kalyan Das. dharmsal got martyred fighting the invaders. After his death, the enemy looted the dharmsal. The sadhs of that dharmsal took shelter with Bhai Khemji and requested him to take over that Bhai Sangat Sahibwali dharmsal. Bhai Khemji accepted the proposal and after handing over the management of Chugga dharmsal to one of his disciple, Bhai Khemji, took away with him a lot of food and other important articles for the rehabilitation of Sangat Sahib Wali dharmsal. His disciple was able to manage and look after the Ferozepur dharmsal.\footnote{Ibid, pp. 453-454.} Chhattiana was an old village in tehsil Chhatiana in Ferozepur. Sufi Faqir Ibrahim Bahmi got converted to Sikhism by Guru Gobind Singh. He was named Bhai Ajmer Singh. Kartaprun is situated near Jalandhar. The centre had got importance during fifth Guru Arjan Dev’s period. He established a dharmsal over here which came to be known as Tham Sahib. Guru Hargobind came to this place and stayed here for some time. He handed over the management of this palce to the Udasi sadhus. Bhai Balu Hasna was given the task to spread the message of Gurbani. Bhai Balu Hasna stayed here for long time. This Dharmsal came under the control of the Udasis. Later on the Shiromani Gurudwara Prabandhak Committee took over the control of this dharmsal during Gurdwara reform movement. Under the Gurdwara Act it came under Shiromani Gurudwara Prabandhak Committee.\footnote{Ibid, p. 162.}

Randhir Singh, in his chapter Bhai Gurbaksh di Shakh (branch); informs about the development and progress of this branch under Bhai Gurbaksh. Bhai Ji came under the influence of Sangat Sahib and became an Udasi Sadh. One of his disciple’s, Bhai Bhomia came to Jandiala Nagar in Jalandhar. His services were recognized even by Shahjahan, who visited the place to meet him. It is said

Shahjahan gave him some land, garden and a well, but Bhai Bhomia gave all this to one of his disciples.\textsuperscript{124} Bhai Raja Ram succeeded Bhumia and he was succeeded by Sanmukh Das, who constructed a Burj in the nagar and soon the recitation of \textit{Granth Sahib} started along with langar. Sodal Dharmsal is situated near Jalandhar station. Pandit Sachidanand of Ferozepur had come to stay here and he got a dharmsal constructed over here.\textsuperscript{128}

Sidqi Das dharmsal is situated at Banga nagar, tehsil Nawashehr, in Jalandhar. This was constructed by Sidqi Das, the grandson of Mian Sahib. He was the disciple of Sant Das Khudiwala. During Akali Movement, the Shiromani Gurudwara Prabandhak Committee tried to take the control of it. Mahant Ram Sharan Das was able to keep it intact.\textsuperscript{129} Darshan Das was its Mahant in 1959. Khatkarkalan Dharmsal was constructed by Nanak Ram. He was disciple of Angarh Dev, who was earlier Guru of Sutte Parkash.\textsuperscript{130}

Randhawa offered a land for Dharmsal and Krori Mal gave land for sangat and langar. In 1522, Guru Nanak Devji on his return from Udāsī tours adopted the family attire; he got a dharmsal constructed there. In 1539, he handed over the succession to Guru Angad. In 1784, the city was washed away by the floods and all the earlier buildings were also washed away. Sardar Budh Singh Donda offered a help of rupees two thousand and soon a dharmsal was constructed again. The followers of Baba Lal Chand from Balu Hasna Dhuan served this dharmsal for a long time till it was overtaken by Shiromani Gurdwara Prabandhak Committee.131

The detailed discussion of the Udāsī establishments given in the accounts of Brahmand Udasin and Randhir Singh discussed above leads to the following conclusions. Brahmanand Udasin wrote his work during the period when the Udāsīs were facing an identity crisis and onslaught from the Akalis reformers, whom they considered as usurpers. Brahmanand vehemently and repeatedly tries to prove the non-Sikh identity of the Udāsīs. Randhir Singh on the other hand has tried to prove that the Udāsīs were the Sikhs as many Udāsī Mahants had acted as custodians of the Sikh shrines during the 19th and early 20th centuries.

138 Randhir Singh gives the information that in the following areas land was given to Jassowal Dharmsala by different land lords and Jagirdars:

- Jassowal: 63 Bigha, 17 Biswa, 8 Biswasi
- Bahila: 71 Bigha, 18 Biswa, 18 Biswasi
- Kheri: 33 Bigha, 2 Biswa, 1 Biswasi
- Dulan Chhoti: 25 Bigha, 4 Biswa, 13 Biswasi
- Gopalpur: 1 Bigha, 0 Biswa, 8 Biswasi
- Raipur: 37 Bigha, 4 Biswa, 8 Biswasi
- Mansuran: 2 Bigha, 19 Biswa, 16 Biswasi
- Dhandra: 114 Bigha, 6 Biswa, 2 Biswasi
- Rurka: 59 Bigha, 10 Biswa, 10 Biswasi
- Mohi: 9 Bigha, 0 Biswa, 7 Biswasi
- Kular: 26 Bigha, 10 Biswa, 15 Biswasi

Brahmanand has pleaded the cause of the Udāsīs by giving detailed account of the Udāsī establishments especially those which were later on undertaken by the Shiromani Gurdwara Prabandhak Committee. Brahmanand insists that a Sadhu can become Sadhu only and in no way he can become a house holder or a Sikh. He gives examples of many Udāsī Sadhus, who were never known as Sikhs, but Udāsīs only. He writes that the Akalis were using different kinds of yard-sticks to refer to the Udāsīs as Sikhs. As per their convenience, at times they considered them as Sikhs and when need not, they referred to them as Udāsīs. He cautions Udāsīs to remain alert from such critics and be prepared for the coming catastrophe. He supports his argument by referring to the arguments of the European scholars, like Maclagen, Ibbetson and H.A. Rose.\textsuperscript{141} Randhir Singh claimed that the main reason for the downfall of the Udāsīs was that they had become householders and had distributed the lands among their children, which actually belonged to the institutions.\textsuperscript{142} While referring to the occupation of the Gurdwaras by Mahants, he blames them that they converted religious places into places of worldly pleasures.\textsuperscript{143}

Brahmanand also tries to find out the causes responsible for the downfall of the Udāsīs as a whole. He puts the entire blame on the Akalis and others, besides the weaknesses of the Udāsī Mahants. He writes, “I am sorry to say, that \textsuperscript{141} Maclagen, “They are almost always celibates, and are sometimes, though not usually congreated in monasteries. They are generally found wondering too, and from their sacred places, such as Amritsar, Dera Nanak, Kartarpur and the like. Their services consist of ringing of a bell, and blare of instrument, and chanting of hymns, and waving of lights before the Adi-Grant, and the picture of Baba Nanak.”; Ibbetson writes in his Census Report, “They (Udasis) again being founded before the time of Guru Gobind have for the most part returned themselves as Hindus. They are for the most part celibate, and the naked section of Udisis are always so. They practice Hindu rites, wear the Tilak or sect mark, and reject the Granth of Guru Gobind, but revere the Granth of Baba Nanak. They are hardly recognized as Sikhs. They are said to bear high character, and are sometimes collected at monasteries”; H.A.Rose writes, “The Udasi tenants though largely tinctured with Hindu asceticism found many proselytes among the descendants and followers of the orthodox Gurus.” Brahmanand Udasin, Guru Udasin Mat Darpan pp. 420 - 421.

the Udāsīs are being condemned and considered as a low caste”. The reasons he cited for this development were: the Udāsīs had stopped respecting their elders, never bothered to protect their religion (like the Sikhs), and had no feeling for their fellow Udāsīs. He writes that the Udāsīs were of nationalist character, but with passage of time, had lost interest, and went to deep sleep. This resulted in all condemnation of the Udāsīs and their activities. It became the target of criticism in the hands of newly formed Dal, though he does not mention it directly, but it points to the Akali Dal.

He further claims that there was a time when the Udāsī Sadhs worked hard for the development and spread of Sikhism in time of crisis, but today, they stand condemned by the Akali Dal. Every available source like tracts, pamphlets, newspapers and speeches were utilized to defame the Udāsīs. He cites the examples of some of the newspapers who had written much against the Udāsī Mahants and its working. Udit Singh, the member of Singh Sabha, had condemned Alakh Ram in his article. He called the great old Udāsī Sant Alakh Ram as a corrupt person. Brahmanand writes that if such an old and well known Udāsī Mahant could not be spared what to talk of the young Mahants who were living in modern buildings. Similarly, Keshavanand was condemned for his discourse delivered at Nankana Sahib in 1910 by the Akali Dal worker, Kartar Singh Lasini.

Keshavanand had argued:

1. All the ten Gurus were the preachers of Sanantan Dharm.
2. Guru Tegh bahadur and four Sahibjadas had sacrificed their lives to save Hindus.
3. Granth Sahib contains many words from Vedas and it is merely a translation of the Vedas.

145 Ibid, p. 452.
146 Ibid, p. 453.
4. The modern Khalsa, who is trying to convert Muslims into Sikh fold, is against the precepts of Sikhism.

5. Only the members of the four Varnas could become Khalsa.

6. All the ten Gurus followed Hindu rituals on junctures from birth to death.

7. The present leaders of the Khalsa lack knowledge to understand Sikhism and intellect to propagate it, that is why they condemn the Udāsīs.

8. They are unable to spread the message of Sikhism among masses and are losing hold over them, as compared to the Udāsīs.

9. As they could not match them in knowledge and intellect of propagation, they adopted the method of character assassination of the Udāsī Mahants to whom the people revered.

10. Even Sikh Gurus supported and paid respect to the Udāsī Sadhus but these Khalsas condemned them as they could not understand the Gurus saying in their right perspective.

Kartar Singh Lasini in his reply to Kashvanand’s criticism of the Khalsa wrote:

1. How come these Udāsīs consider themselves as Nationalists.

2. I will prove that they are responsible for India’s miseries.

3. How come these Sadhus who feed themselves on Badamrogan (Almond extract) could control their cardinal desires.

4. In the garb of saffron clothes they touch and talk to women, how could they claim to be pure.

5. How could a bachelor living on begging, and leading an idle life serve the society. In no way such a person could compare with an upright Sikh, who lives in a family and supports it with his earnings.

6. Udāsī Sadhs pretend to believe and recite Granth sahib, but in reality they follow and preach from Upanishad, Panchadasi, Sarag, and Vedant etc.
Brahmand writes that such articles and condemnation poisoned the people against the Udāsīs. They also composed songs and prayers condemning the Udāsīs. They projected Sri Chand as a disobedient and obtuse son of Nanak. The main reason for this criticism by the Akalis was due to the fact that the Udāsīs were having hold over the major Sikh Shrines. In the time of turbulence and turmoil, the Udāsīs had managed and looked after these shrines, which resulted in their progress. The successful development and growth of these shrines became the cause of contention between the Sikhs and the Udāsīs. Akalis wanted to get back the lost control over them. Brahmanand argues that originally these shrines were situated at the remote places and at desolated areas. It was due to the efforts of the Udāsi Mahants that new buildings were constructed at the thickly inhabited areas, resulting in its overall growth and development. Guru Ka Bagh Shrine, situated at Ajnala Tehsil, in Amritsar district, was originally situated on a coarse place which was later on developed into a prosperous cite, with a garden pond and a dera. Similarly, he attributes the growth of Darbar Sahib to Pritam Das and Santokh Das. Giani Gian Singh in his work informs that every year a fair was held at Ror Sahib at Guru Ka Bagh near Senhsara village. The Udāsīs were responsible for its growth and development. It became the main cause of Akali’s envy. All the criticism was responsible for the downfall of the Udāsīs. The people started disrespecting and started doubting the intentions of the sadhus. The Udāsīs failed to unite against this criticism and their laziness resulted in their downfall. The Mahants failed to counter the Akali allegations and it encouraged Akalis to launch an extensive offensive against the Udāsīs. The Udāsīs were forced to flee and leave their shrines to Akalis who occupied them. Nanakana Sahib was also forcefully occupied by them.

Before the advent of the British in the Punjab the number of Udāsī establishments was two hundred and fifty. In the view of an Udāsī writer, Brahmanand, the number of Udāsī institutions was about eighty one in 1923. It may be added here that the lists stating the number of Udāsī Centres at different periods of Udāsī history seem to be highly inflated ones and hence, they need to be used sparingly and judiciously. However, decrease in the number of Udāsī Centres may be explained with reference to the partial withdrawal of the dharmarth grants of the Udāsīs by the new rulers. This proved a major set back to the Udāsī and the number of their establishments in early 20th century. The rise of the Singh Sabhas and the Gurdwara Reform movement also further affected the position of the Udāsī under the British. The Udāsī Mahants had to struggle very hard in order to safeguard their interests. In some cases, the Udāsī assaulted the Akalis, but in the end, they had to give up. Legally, they won a few cases, but they lost many cases in favour of the Akali reformers. All this resulted into substantial decrease in the number of Udāsī centres during the first half of the 20th century. In 1950’s, Randhir Singh recorded about one hundred and twenty three Udāsī centres which included the Malwa region also.

Moreover, the Udāsīs began to assert their status as Hindus. Gradually, they were seprated from the Sikhs, through the Gurdwara Act of 1925. Even the partition of India, further affected the position of the Udāsīs. Many establishments, which were once under the control of the Udāsī Mahants, were left in West Punjab (Pakistan).

On the basis of this analysis, and the information available in the works of Sulakhan Singh, Pandit Brahmanand Udasi and Randhir Singh, one can say that the highest concentration of the Udāsī establishments even in early 20th century was found almost in the same areas or the districts, as it existed during the period of Sikh rule. Moreover, though the number of Udāsī centres gradually decreased in those districts, the core area of the Udāsī influence, however, remained the same during the different phases of their history under the British. It is quite clear from the given table:
The table also brings to light some other important facts of the Udāsī history. For example, the number of Udāsī establishments found in the district of Amritsar constantly remained higher as compared to other districts which suffered in numerical strength. In Ferozepur, their number decreased from thirty six institutions to five in 1923, indicating nearly eighty five percent loss.
Similarly, Ludhiana district registered a loss of seventy seven percent, Lahore almost sixty nine percent, Gurdaspur sixty two percent and Jalandhar fifty eight percent respectively.

The Udāsīs as a religious group had considerably flourished during the period of Sikh rule. Their pro-establishment stance perhaps enabled them to continue their missionary work even during the troubled times of early 18th century. Moreover, their acceptance of early Sikh tradition significantly also made them tolerable to the Khalsa. Significantly, the Akhara of Santokh Das, was found established in close proximity to the Golden Temple in 1760’s. The influence of the Udāsī with the peasantry is evident from some of the donations of land made to them by the zamindars. Hence, the Udāsī establishments played an important role in the social and cultural life of the people. The religious education was imparted in almost all the major Udāsī centres. Separate schools of Gurmukhi and Sanskrit schools were found attached with the Akharas of Mahant Ghumanda Das and Bala Nand in Amritsar. About six persons were receiving instructions in Sanskrit literature in Akhara Ghumanda Das, about thirty were being taught Sanskrit grammar and poetry at Santokhsar Shivala, attached to Akhara Santokh Das or Brahmbuta Akhara. This feature still continues to exist.

The present Udāsī centres have been rendering religious and educational works at their institutions. The reference of Akhara Sangalwala in Amritsar, Bara Akhara at Haridwar, Dera Bahadarpur at Hoshiarpur, Dera Pritam Bhawan at Jalandhar are some of the present Udāsī centres providing religious, educational and medical services to the society. On the social front, Mahant

In the Udâsî Centres, the pupils were imparted knowledge of sacred scriptures of the Hindus and Sikhs, besides some other basic subjects, Arithmetic, multiplication tables and certain works on science and morals. Very rarely, the instructions were imparted in \textit{Lande}, \textit{Urdu}, \textit{Persian} and \textit{Arabic}. In this way, the Udâsîs contributed in preserving the indigenous education which faded gradually with the introduction of new English education system. Most of the establishments once contained the copy of the \textit{Granth Sahib} as the sacred scripture and many a Mahants were well versed in reciting it.

A few important features of the Udâsî establishments were: firstly, the most of the Udâsî institutions with a few exceptions came into prominence during the period of Sikh rule particularly under Maharaja Ranjit Singh. The number of Udâsî establishments thus increased considerably in the early nineteenth century. Secondly, the Sikh rulers patronized the Udâsîs because of their popularity with the common masses in the cities and the villages. Thirdly, besides the grants from the rulers, many of the Udâsî individuals and institutions received donations from the intermediaries and the land owning classes, particularly the peasant proprietors of the Sikh times. Fourthly, majority of the Udâsî establishments lost their grants considerably under the British rulers. Whatever grants they got during that period, it was accompanied by many terms and conditions. Lastly, each Udâsî establishment by and large, existed independently of the others, under a Mahant who had his disciples. Succession to the gaddi was decided by the Mahant. The State treated each establishment as a separate unit. Very rarely did one Mahant manage more than one centre. Some important Udāsī establishments served Langar, two meals a day on all week days. They also provided clothes to the poor and needy, attended travellers and pilgrims.

The Udāsīs during the period of Sikh struggle against the Mughals and Afghans took control of the Gurdwaras and managed their affairs. They looked after the Gurdwaras to the best of their capabilities but later on, with the passage of time, they became corrupt and started using the resources of the Gurdwaras for their personal use which led to their criticism and opposition by the Sikhs in the early twentieth century. Some Udāsī Mahants played an important role as mediators between the public and the Sikh institutions that’s why they were able to get land-grants from the Sikh rulers and the British Government. As long as they were honest and sincere to their duties, they were revered by the Sikh people and the British administration as well.
CHAPTER - III

STATE PATRONAGE

The rulers had been giving grants to the individuals and institutions, in lieu of their meritorious services, as help to the poor and destitute and above all to the religious institutions. The nature and purpose of revenue-free land grants given during the ancient times, in many ways were similar to the revenue-free grants of the rulers of medieval times. Like their Mughal predecessors, the Sikh rulers alienated revenues from land in favour of individuals and institutions belonging to various Sikh and non-Sikh religious groups. The grants, like service, inam and dharmarth\(^1\) were frequently given by the state. These grants were accompanied by certain obligations, which included depositing excess revenue to the state exchequer, performing judicial, executive duties and other assignments as a condition to the grant, but the dharmarth grant was exempt from any such obligation except social responsibility.

The conferment of a dharmarth grant entitled the assignee to receive or collect revenues from the land assigned to him by way of jagir without involving any change in existing rights over the land. Therefore, the amount of revenue to be received or collected from the given piece of land was specifically mentioned in the documents relating to such assignment. Any further alienation of revenue by the Jagirdar in favour of others could not in theory last longer than his tenure.\(^2\) Besides the state patronage, the religious organizations had been receiving liberal grants from various individuals, jagirdars, the local functionaries, and the zamindars during the Sikh rule.\(^3\) The Sikh rulers, like their Mughal predecessors, expected all the grantees not only to pray for the welfare of the state, or their territories, but also to enlist support in matters socio-political.4

\(^1\) Dharmarth: the land revenue alienated in favour of a religious person or institution as charity, by a ruler.

\(^2\) However, many a dharmarth grants made by the Jagirdar continued beyond his tenure because of the sentiment of piety attached to such grants: Foreign/ Political Proceedings, October 15, 1852, No. 116; Foreign/ Political Proceedings, January 14, 1853, Nos. 212-23.

The Jagirs under the Sikh rule may broadly be classified into four categories on the basis of their nature and character. There were jagirs of hereditary and non-hereditary nature. The service jagirs were of non-hereditary nature, where as inam, subsistence and pattidari jagirs were of hereditary nature. Lands held on the same basis as the service jagirs but not against any office, or with any obligation to the state, may appropriately be termed in’am jagirs and they were frequently given by the Sikh rulers by way of reward. Also, there were very large number of holders of dharmarth or revenue-free grants.5

The period from the rise of the Sikh power to the establishment of the Maharaja Ranjit Singh, saw the extensive distribution of the in’am and Dharmarth jagirs.6

The terms most commonly used for dharmarth grants in the Orders of the Sikh rulers are mu’af7 and waguzar8. The revenue-free land given as such was termed as ‘kharij-az-jama9’, because the revenue due from it to the state was not to go to the government treasury but to the grantee. Other cesses (rasumat) were also remitted to him, besides exemption from forced labour (kar-o-begar)10. Tolls and customs were also remitted sometimes. The payment of what was due to the grantee was sometimes made in kind (ghalla).11 establishments were large and important in terms of their resources and influence during the Sikh times. About thirty of these institutions, enjoyed revenue-free grants ranging from 1,000 to 9,000 rupees, twenty from 200 to 800 rupees; and over hundred from 10 to 200 rupees. Brahmbuta Akhara and Dera Baba Nanak received over 18,000 and 12,000 rupees a year respectively.\(^{14}\)

Although no time period was specified for dharmarth grants given by the Sikh rulers, the use of the phrase ‘year after year’ and ‘harvest after harvest’ (sal b’sal, fasl b’fasl), means that the dharmarth grants were given practically in perpetuity.\(^{15}\) Perhaps they were given for life time as long as they (receiver) remained loyal to the assigned obligation attached to the grants.

The Sikh rulers, from the very beginning confirmed the grants given by the former masters of the territories they occupied. faqirs, and brahmans were allowed to continue undisturbed by the Sikh rulers.

Among the Sikh religious Orders, the Udāsīs enjoyed the maximum revenue free grants, next to the Sodhis and the Bedis. The Udāsīs and the majority of their establishments came into prominence due to the liberal grants awarded by Maharaja Ranjit Singh. By the end of the eighteenth century, when the Sikhs came to power, the Udāsīs grew in social, political and economic sphere, as well as in numbers.

Towards the close of the Sikh rule about seventy percent of the total Udāsī establishments enjoyed the state patronage in addition to the grants received from several individuals. The total estimated value of the grants enjoyed by the Udāsī was over two lacs of rupees a year, which constituted about ten percent of the total alienated revenue-free grants. Towards the end of the Sikh rule at Lahore, according to a contemporary estimate, 20 lacs of rupees were given in religious grants. About 200 Udāsī centers were enjoying grants worth about 80,000 a year.

Before the rise of the Sikhs, hardly a dozen Udāsī centres were in existence in the districts of Lahore, Amritsar, Gurdaspur, Shekhupura, Gujranwala, Ferozepur and Jalandhar. Towards the end of eighteenth century, the number of Udāsī institutions patronized by the Sikhs, had reached nearly fifty. In the early nineteenth century, under Maharaja Ranjit Singh, their number crossed hundred and by the end of the Sikh rule in Punjab 1849, it had touched two hundred and fifty. Besides, Lahore, Amritsar, Gurdaspur, Shekhupura, Gujranwala, Ferozepur and Jalandhar these institutions spread to the other districts of Gujarat, Sialkot, Jhang, Ludhiana, Shahpur, Multan, Kangra, and Dera Ismail Khan.

The Sikh rulers alienated much larger share of their revenues in favour of the religious groups than their Mughal predecessors. Extensive and liberal patronage of religious classes by the Sikh rulers was thus an expression of their practical good sense as well as an expression of their sense of piety and catholic outlook. The reason for such benevolence may be attributed to their influence with the people and service rendered by them to the society. It may be added that there are instances when dharmarth grant was given in lieu of service rendered in the war. As compared to the Mughals and the early Sikh rulers, the Udâsîs flourished more during the reign of Maharaja Ranjit Singh.

The Khalsa Darbar records bear testimony of individuals and institutions of numerous dharmarth grant entries in favour of individual Udâsî and Udâsî Akharas including the famous Brahmbuta Akhara in Amritsar. The other Udâsî Akharas were of Basant Singh in Shri Hargobindpur, Baba Bhagwan Singh in Doda, Mahant Atma Ram in Narowal, Mahant Budh Das in Sanktara, Har Prashad Udâsî of Kuthala, Dera Shah Balawal in Batala and that of Santokh Das Udâsî in Gujrat.

About half a dozen of the old Udâsî centers received revenue free grants from the Mughal rulers and the Afghan Chiefs of Qasur, before the establishment of Sikh rule. The Udâsî received dharmarth grants from non Sikh rulers during the period of Sikh rule. Over half a dozen Udâsî Mahants received grants from Rai Kalla, Rai Ilias and Rai Ahmed of Raikot, Allah Yar Khan of Sahiwal and Raja Ranjit Dev of Jammu. Bhai Shiv Karan had received a grant from Rai Kalla, in 1752, for the maintenance of dharmshala at Chuharchak in Ferozpur. The grant of 20 acre land worth rupees 17, 11 anas and 4 paisa continued to be enjoyed by Bhai Rama and Mahant Sham Das up to the British times, because the investigation proved that the dharamshala was an old establishment and that it contained 2 pacca wells for the use of villagers and travelers and 1 well for the irrigation purpose, had built a road, a garden and a Mahant Gurdial received grant from Raja Ranjit Dev of Jammu in 1964 for langar at the shrine of Sahib Ram Kaur at kot Naina in Gurdaspur. The grant was confirmed by Maharaja Ranjit Singh against the name of the reigning Mahant in 1834 A.D. Baba Santokh Das, alias Tappa received grant worth over 250 rupees a year from Raja Gulab Singh, in 1844 for the maintenance of akhara at Gujarat. An old grant given by Muhammad Shah, the emperor of Delhi, to Narain Dass Hazuri, continued to his disciple Hardyal and Hardyal’s disciple Raja Ram, of 28 Ghumaon, along with a cash allowance of rupees 45 and 8 annas. Later on Ahmed Shah increased the grant upto 50 Ghumaon, but in 1798 A.D Sardar Dharam Singh, allowed continuation of only 36 Ghumaons for the maintenance of dharmsala in Nakodar, in Jalandhar, and it continued upto the British Times.

The akhara of Baba Santokh Das or Brahmboota akhara enjoyed grant of three villages worth 1600 rupees a year in Manawar, from Raja Gulab Singh. Baba Ghamandi Ram, Baba Rao Dev, Sukhram Das, Saran Das, Baba Puran Das and Charan Das also received patronage from non Sikh chiefs for the maintenance of institution in Ferozpur, Ludhiana and Shahpur. Sukha Ram, disciple of Baba Gumandi Ram, got a grant of 6 acre land, worth rupees 63, 2 annas and 6 paisa for the expenses of dharmsala at Chuhar Chak in Ferozpur, from Rai Illias in 1789 A.D and it continued upto the British Times. Ghumandi Das, resident of Moga, got land grant of 5 acres worth rupees 3, 4 annas and 6 paisa, allotted in 1802 A.D, from Rai Kalla, as dharamarth for the maintenance of dharmsala at Chuharchak in Ferozpur. It continued under the disciple Sukhram. Brandhrath, the deputy commissioner and settlement officer found through the investigation that the claimant Sukhram, had no record to prove the ownership of dharmarth grant but the verification proved that the grant was about fifty years old and that Sukhram spent his time in begging in the neighboring villages and donated all the proceeds of his begging to his followers. He had build 1 pacca well, a dharmshala, 2 gardens and a pond of water. Thus, the British Commissioner sanctioned the grant to be continued for the maintenance of dharmshala.

It continued under his disciple Deva Das and Tehal Das, comprising of nine acres, worth rupees 5, 12 annas and 3 paisa, for the maintenance of Dharmala at Maddoke. The British confirmed that the occupancy was held for the past 55 years, and thus it continued.

45 Ganga Ram got 8 acres worth 5 rupees 8 annas from Rai Kalla in 1792 A.D, for the maintenance of a dharmshala at Chuharchak, in Ferozepur and it continued under his disciple Budh Das. On 16 April 1853, the investigating British Officer remarked that the claimant Budh Dass had no Sanads to prove the claim but the local evidences confirmed that the dharmshala was being maintained for the past 60 years and that Budh Das had added a garden, a pond and a well to the dharmshala. The British Commissioner further ordered the confirmation of the grant till dharmsala existed.

The Udāsī centers mostly large deras and akharas, which had come up before the establishment of Maharaja Ranjit Singh’s rule enjoyed the largest dharmarth grants. The majority of the establishments newly patronized by Maharaja Ranjit Singh and his successors were the dharmsalas which enjoyed grants of rather small value, though they constituted more then 70 percent of the total establishments. Majority of these deras established during 19th century, traced their origins to the past. But a few linked themselves with one or another Dhuan whereas majority linked themselves with bakhshishes. More than a hundred establishments were found associated with the bakhshish of Bai Pheru or Sangat Sahib and about a score of establishments were associated with the bakhshishes of Mihan Sahib, Bhagat Bhagwan, Jit Mal and others. Still there existed several other centers which were not affiliated to either a Dhuan or a bakhshish.

Akhara Santokh Das, popularly known as Akhara Brahmbuta was founded in 1753 and was patronized by Raja Gulab Singh who gave 3 villages worth 16,000 rupees a year in the territory of Manawar for its conservation. Mahant Apbrahm of the Brahmbutta Akhara, had received grants from Raja Gulab Singh in villages Kesu, Barouta and Dasour worth rupees 1000, 400 and

According to Anand Gauba, Amritsar (1849-1947), Akhara Santokh Das was established in 1770s. Mahant Brahmbuta, was very influential person and popular with the citizens. He was at times a member of the municipality pp. 9 Fn. 39, 272.; http://www.sikhiwiki.org/index.php/Udasi.; http://indiankanoon .org/doc/1921548/.
According to Gaini Gian Singh the Akhara enjoyed a grant of rupees one lac, seven thousand and seven hundred rupees were given by the Sikh Sardars. After the settlement of the British Government in 1906, during the time of Mahant Brahmhari, it was reduced to rupees twelve thousand four sixty five rupees and after his death, it was further reduced to 2,665 rupees and later to 9,800 rupees only. Later on the king of Jammu conferred a Jagir worth rupees 905 and Bhup Singh Roparia allotted a well for fifty years in Ambala. Santokh Das had received only 215 rupees a year in late 18th century. Mahant Apbrahm got grants from Bhangi and Ahluwalia chiefs, but largest share came from Maharaja Ranjit Singh in early 19th century. Some village zamindars donated land to the Akhara while, Ranjit Singh and his successors continued their patronage to the successor of Mahant Apbrahm. Mahant Apbrahm had received dharmarth grants from Bhangi Sardars Gurdit Singh, Lehna Singh, Gujjar Singh and Sahib Singh, Sardar Fateh Ahluwalia, Rani Chand Kaur, Sardar Kaur Singh Jung and Sardar Nihal Singh, besides grants from Maharaja Ranjit Singh. In the 1840’s it had about 200 resident Sadhus well versed in the Sikh scriptures, about 70 musicians, provided accommodation and langar for poor. Towards the end of the Sikh rule, it was receiving nearly 18,000 rupees a year as dharmarth grant and lands worth 5,000 rupees a year were resumed around 1850 and after the death of Brahmhari in 1852 grants worth rupees 3000 were resumed. Grants woth 700 rupees were received by Mahant Santokh Das and Brahmhari, rest of the grants were received by Mahant Apbrahm during the fist half of the 19th century.

After the death of Pritam Das of Sangalwala Akhara, Amritsar in 1787, Brahmrup, Sarup Anand and Mahant Sham Das succeeded him. According to

There are many cases of individual Mahants and grantees enjoying revenue-free land grants. The British investigating officer, considering the case of, Sarup Singh allowed the continuance of the existing grant mentioning that the dharmsala was visited by the Sikhs; the travelers were provided stay and that the grant was an old one. This was another instance where British official recognized the importance of the dharmsala and special instructions were issued for its maintenance. In similar case, the Gurdit Singh of Hafizabad was allowed to continue with the old grant. Regarding the case of Dyal Singh, of Jaluka Ludhiana, the investigating officer mentioned that the grantee could not produce sufficient documents to prove the possession of the land, but the lambardars and Patwaris confirmed about the existence of a dera in the past. The investigating officer remarked that the grant was not that old as it was being

It was originally granted in 1752 A.D. for the maintenance of a dharamsala and a pond at Chuharchak, Moga. Gursharan Das, son of Budh Das, got further confirmation of a dharmarth grant originally granted in 1843 A.D. for maintaining a dharmsala at Zeera in Ferozpur.\(^{137}\) Hameer Shah, son of Chandan Shah, got a grant in 1830’s, for maintaining a Takya meant for the travellers at Rodewalla in Zeera, of 1 acre, worth rupees 3 and 11 anaas.\(^{138}\) Bhoop Singh, son of Gurdit Singh and disciple of Gulab Das, got 2 acres grant worth 1 rupee, in 1803 A.D for a dharmsala in Ferozpur.\(^{139}\) Auree Das, son of Bhagat Ram, got a dharmarth in 1813 A.D of 3 acres, worth rupees 3 and 4 paisa from Sukhram, for a dharmsala at Sudda Singh in Ferozpur.\(^{140}\) Ram Parkash, disciple of Jaiparkash, got dharmarth for dharmsala at Sudda Singh in Ferozpur, in 1772 A.D, of 7 acres , worth rupees 3 and 8 paisa.\(^{141}\)

the village. It was continued further by the British. Ram Das and Maluk Das, disciples of Guru Ganpat Das, got a grant in 1842 A.D, from Sardar Mahal Singh Ahluwalia for the maintenance of dharmsala at Zeera in Ferozepur of 2 acres worth rupees 1, 7 annas and 2 paisa. The British allowed the continuance of the grant though the claimants could not produce the sanads. Hariya Das, son of Khushal Das, got a grant from Raja Fateh Singh Ahluwalia in 1812 A.D. of 15 acres worth rupees 8 , for a dharmsala at Zeera in Ferozepur.

Gulab Das, disciple of Sangat Shah, resident of village Khosa Kotla, Zeera, Zilla Ferozepur, got a grant in 1812 A.D, from Raja Fateh Singh Ahluwalia for the maintenance of a dharmsala at Dalewal, of 4 acres worth 2 rupees. Babu Sukhchain, son of Kishan Das, got a grant in 1820 A.D, of 6 acres worth rupees 4 for a dharmsala at Khosa Kotla in Zeera, Ferozpur. Moan Das, disciple of Surmukh Das got land from Rai Ahmad of Raikot around 1784 A.D, of 10 Bighas and 14 Biswas, for a dharmsala at Akalgarh, Ludhiana. The dharmsala existed for the past 73 years and was continued by the British in 1857 A.D on the condition of good behaviour and loyalty of the occupant towards the British. Gulab Das, Bhagwan Das, disciples of Jeeto Ram and Gurain Das, got grant from Rai Ahmad of Raikot, in 1803 A.D for the maintenance of a dharmsala at Akalgarh, Ludhiana, of 33 Bighas and 16 biswas. Bram Dev, disciple of Kishan, is yet another similar case.

The religious grants were given to the mosques, temples and tombs, without any bias towards any particular sect. The priestly class in general and Udâsîs in particular received the benevolent donations from the Government. Puran Das, disciple of Jugraj, village Julowalee, Pargana Khanna, zila

The original guarantee of the jagir, Mohar Das, held it for 15 years, Jugraj continued for next 25 years and Puran Das for another 20 years.\(^\text{151}\) The investigating officer A. Denison on 1 February 1853 recorded that he personally visited the grant of Puran Das. He informs that it had been held by three successive persons for the past 60 years and that Dharmala was well maintained and the faqirs were fed regularly. He recommended 51 Bighas to be given as grant. In this case we find that the original grant was of 27 Bighas but was raised to 51 on the recommendation of investigating officer. G.B. Burns, the commissioner confirmed the recommendation and it was endorsed by John Lawrence.\(^\text{152}\) Udāsī Mahant of Naina Kot received rupees 614/- from Ghanwal Sogian in Shakargarh in 1892.\(^\text{153}\)

The British settlement officer of the Montgomery District noticed that “Udāsī Fakirs own several fine villages in the west of Dipalpur tehsil. Among them is Bhuman Shah at which there is a shrine of a saint of that name and where food is distributed gratuitously. This is supported partly by proceeds of the jagirs enjoyed by the incumbent of the shrine and partly by the contributions of the Kambohs, who look upon Bhuman Shah as their patron who lived from 1687-1756 A.D.”\(^\text{154}\) Jassowal was another famous alms house which amounted to several hundred acres. During the land settlement period the mahants of Jassowal dharmsala were Gulab Dass, Diwan Dass and Madho Das. Letter no.144 dated 29 January 1857 refers to land allotment at Mohi in the name of Madho Das. Dharamsala Bhai Ram Das at village Sayidwala in Shekupura district, Pakistan and dharamsala Muzang, Lahore or also known as dharamsala Bhai Ram Das at Lahore also got revenue free lands: 339 kanal and 5 marlas at village Sayidwala; 144 kanal in the same village in the name of Paramanand Singh son of Het Ram Sadh Udâsi Khalsa Nanak Paadri; land revenue of 572 kanal 7 marlas at village Malka Haji according to letter of secretary government Punjab no. 61 dated 13th April 1886 and financial commissioner’s letter no. 228 dated 16 April 1886 for the maintenance of both the dharamsalas on the condition of good conduct of the organizers; revenue free land according to the letters referred above was also allotted in village Joya no. 294, 64 kanal and 15 marla. government to win the sympathy of the masses which was in direct contact with the priestly class and such institutions. This alliance between the new government and the religious groups did not last long and drop in the grant was noticed. The gradual loss of patronage resulted in the decrease of Udāsī institutions and in retrospect its influence on its masses. The Udāsī establishments suffered in terms of patronage a serious set back after the fall of Sikh rule in 1849. During Sikh times the total grants enjoyed by Dera-i-kalan of Phai Pheru was rupees 6, 500. Out of which lands worth over 200 rupees a year were resumed in 1850’s. Mahant Dhian Das of the dera was asked to pay fourth of the total revenue left to the establishment in grant. After his death, the grants were further curtailed. The case of grants of this dera was treated with indulgence by the British on account of the good conduct of Mahant Dhian Das and the members of establishment during Anglo-Sikh war out of the total grant of 18,000 rupees a year enjoyed by the Akhara of Baba Santokh Das during Sikh times, lands worth over 5,000 rupees a year were resumed around 1850. After the death of Mahant Brahmhari in 1852, grant worth over 3,000 rupees were resumed and by the end of nineteenth century Akhara Santokh Das had a grant of only seven thousand rupees a year. Another example of Darbar Baba Sri Chand lost lands worth 1,000 rupees after annexation by the British.

Nihal Das, son of Mansa Ram, of village Kallan, Pargana Bharatgarh, zila Ludhiana held a dharamarth of 680 bighas irrigated by three pucca wells. The name of the original grantor and the period is not known but was confirmed by Maharaja Ranjit Singh. The investigating officer A. taking note of this complaint 400 bighas were deducted and 280 were left and confirmed as grant. He further observed personally and recorded that Dharmsala was actually a large place where 400 faqirs and many people visited daily to pray. Granthis recited the Granth and langar was also served. The above note is important from two angles, i.e. the Dharmsala was in existence before the time of Ranjit Singh. Though the name of original granter and the period of grant is unknown but was confirmed by Maharaja Ranjit Singh in 1825 A.D. Secondly, the British government reduced it and confirmed the grant till the grantee maintained it properly. The document is signed by commissioner G.B. Burns and is endorsed by Chief Commissioner John Lawrence. Kachee Ram\textsuperscript{162} of village Dhera of Khanna zilla in Ludhiana had a holding of one pucca well and a jagir of 42 Bighas, amounting to the total value of 37 rupees, 6 annas and 9 paisa, granted by Raja Ranjit Singh of Nabha in 1761 A.D. for the upkeep and distribution of langar to the visitors at dharamsala in Ludhiana. It was held by three different persons before it went to the present holder Kachee Ram in 1853.\textsuperscript{163} After completing the enquiry the British investigating Officer, recorded “Half the land including the well be upheld in perpetuity and the other half resumed as the expenses were not much.” The grant was granted for the life time of the incumbent and 25 bighas were to be given to the successor of Kachee Ram, which means the British Government reduced 17 bighas out of 42 bighas of land.\textsuperscript{164}

\textsuperscript{163} Balanand held this jagir for 25 years and after him his successor Kachee Ram was the holder for the past 10 years.

\textsuperscript{164} The remarks of the investigating officer, ‘On enquiry it passes that the land has been granted to the Manfeedar for the expenses of langar and dharamsala, but as the Udasi are not so much, I want to recommend that half the land including the well be upheld in perpetuity and the other half returned as it was signed by settlement officers. Then view of grants commissioner followed like this, “The whole for the life of the present Manfeedar, after his death 25 Bighas besides the well for the term of settlement for the dharamsala expenses, after which further orders will be issued”: Foreign/ Political Proceedings, 31 Dec. 1858, No. 1079, Case 5.
It was perhaps because of the simple living standards and the social service being rendered by the Udāsīs that they were mistaken as beggars. The problem of identity arose and many petitions were filed by the Udāsī Mahants that the Udāsīs should be recorded as Sadhs and not as beggars. The Census Commissioner issued orders to inform all the petitioners that the matter was considered seriously and in the coming Census of 1931, the Udāsīs would be considered as Sadhs and not as beggars.\(^{165}\)

A large number of revenue-free grants were given to the Udāsīs during the 19\(^{th}\) century, but in 1935 they were enjoying only six such grants.\(^{166}\) The Udāsīs remained important after the end of the Sikh rule in 1849. In 1881, seventy percent of the Udāsīs still belonged to the area covered by the British Punjab and their numerical strength was larger than that of any religious group among the Sikhs, being over 16,000 as against about 2000 of Nirmalas.\(^{167}\)

The influence of the Singh Sabha and Arya Samaj was detrimental to the popularity of the Udāsīs. The situation changed in early 20\(^{th}\) century with the successful struggle of the Akalis for the Gurdwara reform which dealt a severe blow to the prestige and position of the Udāsī Mahants because the Sikhs had started the move to capture the Gurdwaras and Deras. The Udāsīs who had claimed themselves to be Sikhs and registered so in the census records\(^{168}\) filed petitions that they should now be considered as Hindus in forthcoming Census of 1931,\(^{169}\) otherwise, they would boycott the coming Census of 1931.\(^{170}\)

The Majority of the Udāsī establishments lost nearly twenty five percent of their grants in the 1850’s and suffered further losses on the death of the reigning Mahant in the second half of the 19th century. There was hardly any increase in the Udāsī centers under the British after 1849. A change was seen in the position of the Mahants in the second half of the nineteenth century. The Mahants who had been just the custodians of the Udāsī establishments, started claiming themselves as the owners. The British rulers followed a general policy to discourage the Dharmarth grants afterwards.171 No fresh revenue free grants were issued to the Udāsīs or the other priestly classes. At the time of land-revenue settlements by the British, the Udāsī Mahants were made the owners of the property and the land attached with their Udāsī institutions. The result was that many establishments were turned into private houses and were closed to the public.172 The Udāsī Mahants naturally had the official backing of the British administrators as the tried vested interests.173 British settlement officer of Ludhiana mentioned that “At the regular settlement, the incumbent was in every case returned as owner of land which was at the same time exempted

The main object of their life being to rule over the world for the protection of their own interest. Thus, there being so vast a difference in religion: the one being diametrically opposed to the other. It is a great wonder that the authorities are mistaking the Udāsīs for the Sikhs.....”

CHAPTER-IV

ORGANIZATIONAL STRUCTURE

The Udāsī establishments or centres were known by various names, like akhara, deras, gurdwaras, asthans, temples, samadhs and dharmsalas, and the distinctions of nomenclature probably implied some minor or major distinction of origin, character or function. These centres were the offshoots of one or the other important organization of the Udāsī, known as Dhuan or Bakshishes. Besides this common link, these centres had no other obligation or relation with the parental organization in matter of internal management and functioning of the establishment. There were centres which were established by influential Udāsī Mahants belonging to either a Dhuan or a Bakshish of the Udāsī sect. The centres varied in size, some were small and others were large, varying accordingly. They were known either after the name of their founder or by the name of the location and some for its peculiar features as Sangalwala Akhara at Amritsar got its name due to the use of Sangal at its entrance. There were also centres which did not claim their affiliation with any Order of the Udāsī.

The Akhara was the largest organization of the Udāsī sect. There was no fixed size for the establishment. The Samadh was generally a place where a memorial had been constructed in sacred memory of the Sadh, Mahant or Sant related to the Udāsī order.1 Gurdwaras, associated with the life of the Sikh gurus, were often taken over by Udāsī Mahant or actually got constructed by them. Some of these were also known as Darbars.2 In the country side, the establishment called dharmsal served secular as well as religious purposes and hence its popularity with people of the village.3

1 Samadh, a memorial raised on the place of cremation, generally for persons prominent in one sphere or another: Indu Banga Agrarian System of the Sikhs, p. 210.
2 Synonymous with Gurdwara as a place of Sikh worship; also a resting place for travellers: Indu Banga, Agrarian System of the Sikhs, p. 198.
Every Udāsī centre had its own Mahant with its chelas, gurbhais and other sadhs and attendants including musicians, granthis, cooks, and the menials. They all had the different modes of running the centre. As it may be expected the number of the chela of a Mahant and other inmates of the centre varied widely from one centre to another due to variation in the sources. The Mahant was the chief organizer of all the religious, financial, and administrative affairs.4

Every centre bustled with activity around its Mahant, who was its main sole and spirit. Besides chelas, gurbhais, sadhs, and other attendants, all remained attached to the centre. The more the numbers, better the prospects. The number indicated the prosperity of the establishment and organization of the Mahant. The Mahant as the sole authority of the establishment had the power to nominate his successor. As it was up to the Mahant to nominate his successor, they adopted different patterns to nominate their successor. In most of the cases, it was kept a secret and the nomination was disclosed and declared at the last moment of Mahant’s life. This always prompted others to serve their master in right earnest way in order to win his favour. It was also a move on the part of the Mahant to get dedication and service from the staff. He could choose one either from his chelas or from any other member of the centre to whom he considered appropriate for the guru gaddi.

In case of a dispute a panchayat formed by other Mahants did intervene in the matter. The senior most chela genuinely succeeded to the gaddi of the Mahant though there are instances of gurbhai succeeding to the gaddi.5 On enquiry about the selection and appointment of the chela as Mahant of the deras, it was informed by Swami Anand Raghav that the appointment and selection of the successor totally lay in the hand of the deras in-charge.6 Swami Ganesh Das also confirmed the same procedure as far as the selection of the successor was concerned.7 On enquiry, whether he has so far nominated his successor or not, he said ‘I am yet to find one. Those, whom I had selected, left the Ashram for materialistic pursuits. As such I am still looking for some competent person to succeed me’.8 He further told that Panchaiti Akhara, Bara, had nothing to do with the internal affairs of the Ashram. The same view about the scarcity of competent chela that could succeed him was expressed by Mahant Piara Das of Dera Maru Das, Alawalpur, Jalandhar. This confirms the independent working of the Udasi establishments.

All the Udasi centres had been in one way or the other attached to one of the parent body that is dhuan or bakshish, but this relation was limited up to spiritual affiliation only. By spiritual affiliation it means that they were having relation with the parental organisations, as some had been the old chelas or followers of either dhuan or bakshish. As such they respected the parental body and paid obeisance to it. Besides this, the parent body had no control or power to interfere in the working of the internal affairs of the Akhara, dera, Samadh, asthan, Gurdwara, temple, or dharmsalas. Each Udasi centre functioned independently in its administration, financial matters, and other religious and semi-religious affairs.

II

The Udasi centres of the early 19th century may broadly be classified into four groups. Firstly, there were centres which claimed no affiliation with any order of the Udasis. They formed nearly fifty percent of the total of two hundred and fifty establishment towards the end of the Sikh rule. Secondly, there were institutions which claimed affiliation with one or another of the bakhshishes. Thirdly, there were institutions which claimed affiliation with one or the other of four dhuans. Fourthly, there were also some centres which traced their existence to some important Udasi Mahants, directly or indirectly associated with either dhuan or a bakshish. Each category included rural and urban Udasi centres varying in number, size, nomenclature, and resources.

The centres having no affiliation with any Order of the Udasis had come up largely during the first half of the 19th century. Though some of these centres claimed spiritual ties with a parent establishment, each of them functioned independently. Over a hundred of these were located in villages and the rest in towns and cities. Nearly a hundred of these institutions were known as dharmsalas, over a dozen as deras and Akharas, and over a dozen as Darbars and Gurdwaras, but a close association existed between many of these Deras, Akharas, dharmasalas and Darbars. Sulakhan Singh has given examples of existing ties between these establishments.

The dharmasalas established at Mahadevi and Dhang in the Sheikhpura district had for example spiritual ties with the Dharamsala at Moodhwala in the same district. The Sikh Darbars known as Balkarira Sahib and Mal Asthan Sahib at Nankana were spiritually linked with the main Darbars at Nankana Sahib. The dharmasalas of the village Kacha Pakka was linked with the important Udasi Dera of Bhai Phuman Sahib in Montgomery district. The link between these deras, darbars, dharmasalas, and Gurdwaras according to the author was of spiritual nature only. It means that they were recognizing the spiritual authority of the other deras, darbars, dharmasalas akharas or gurdwaras to which it was related by one way or the other, but as far as internal organisation and administration of the institution was concerned they were independent.

The second category was of those establishments which were supposed to be affiliated with one or another bakhshish. The majority of these had come up in the late 18th century. The origin and possible affiliation of these centres can be traced because of their known spiritual ties with the founders of bakhshishes mentioned in the documentary and Panda Vahi records. Akhara of Santokh Das according to the Panda Vahi, records, claimed affiliation with the bakhshish of Mihan Sahib or Bhai Pheru. With the bakhshish of Bhagat Bhagwan were said to have been affiliated about 260 gaddis in Bihar only the Bibeksar Akhara at Amritsar is known to have been affiliated with the order of Bhagat Bhagwan. In all, over a hundred centres were claimed to have been affiliated with the bakhshish of Sangat Sahib through his chelas, notably Narain Das, Bhai Bindraban, Bhai Ajit Sahib, Jainti Das and Chukha Sahib and, in turn, through their chelas.

The third category was of those centres which claimed to be affiliated with one or another of the four dhuans. They had come up before and during the period of early Sikh rule. Both in rural and urban areas, they consisted of deras and akharas.

15 With the sanad of Sahib Buddha at Ram Das were affiliated the dharmasalas at Kot Naina in tehsil Shakargarh and at Tejanwall in tehsil Batala in the Gurdaspur district.
16 The centres affiliated with the bakhshishes of Jit Mal, Sodhi Dakhni Rai, Sadhu Nand Lal, the Diwane and the Ram Rai ke Udasi are not known from any other source than Giani Gian Singh. See, Sulakhan Singh, Heterodoxy in the Sikh Tradition, p-72.
and dharmsalas of small, medium, and large size. The dera of Charan Shah at Bahadurpur and a dera at Chinighati in the Hoshiarpur district claimed affiliation with the dhuan of Phul Sahib." Similarly, there are many such examples of the deras affiliated to different dhuans. The fourth category consisted of some centres which traced their existence to some important Udāsī Mahants, directly or indirectly associated with either a dhuan or a bakhshish. Centres associated with the Nange Udāsī at Amritsar and Patiala claimed affiliation with Mahant Pritam Das. The Nirbans and the Niranjanias, two sub-sections of the Nange Udāsī, owed their origins to him. Pritam Das, the Mahant of a famous Udāsī Akhara in Amritsar, presently known as Akhara Sangalwala, founded a centre at Haridwar which came to be known as Bara Akhara or Great Akhara. All the centres connected with the four dhuans were believed to be linked with the Akhara of Pritam Das. Similarly, Santokh Das, the founder of Akhara Brahmbuta, situated in the precincts of the Golden Temple at Amritsar, established an Akhara of his own, known as chhota or Naya Akhara, probably towards the close of Maharaja Ranjit Singh's reign. All the centres affiliated to the bakhshish of Bhai Pheru or Sangat Sahib was believed to be linked with the Akhara of Santokh Das.

III

The memorandum of Rules and Regulations contained the guidelines for the organizers of the Udāsī sect, to manage and control the various organizations under them. It becomes imperative first to understand the aims and objectives of the society of the Udāsī sect named “Sri 108 Pujyapad advait Punch Parmeshwar Panchaiti Akhara Bara Udasin Nirwan generally know as Panchaiti Akhara Bara Undasin”, in order to understand the organizational structure of the Akharas:

\textsuperscript{21} On inquiry it was found that centres vied with one another to seek control of important location at haridwar much earlier than the beginning of the Kumbh Mela by installing their flag at the selected place. It indicates and demarcates their camp site.
The head office of the Udāsī Akhara Bara is at Allahbad, and its branches are spread to the different parts of the country.22 The income of the Akhara is derived from many other sources like Zamindari, rent from houses and shops, sale of bagh bahar, interest from money invested or given in loans, offerings, sale of grains and timber forests any other lawful business or trade.

The Udāsī Akharas own property in shape of agricultural land, shops, houses, gardens, and grooves. The information was given by the Shri Mahants of both the Bara and Naya Akhara at Haridwar. The Shri Mahant at Bara Akhara, Shankra Das had disclosed the presence of large tract of agricultural land and other property existing within in the vicinity of Haridwar only. He also informed that such property was looked after by the mahants, sadhs, chelas, and other official dignitaries appointed for the said purpose, by the Udāsī Akhara Bara, Allahbad, from time to time. As such, all the managers are responsible for their work to the main head office and they work according to the rules and regulations formulated so. The management can take disciplinary actions against the errant managers and there are instances where the heads had been either transferred or even suspended for the non-performance of their duties assigned to them.

All the property moveable and immovable that exist now and may here after be acquired shall remain vested in the governing body of the Akhara for the time being whose members shall be deemed as trustees, but such vesting shall not create any personal right or title either in the governing body or its members. The real ownership rests permanently in the aforesaid society itself.24

To understand the working of the Akharas, its organizational structure, rules and regulations memorandum published by the Panchaiti Akhara Bara, Allahbad, 22 The general body of the Mahants has been empowered to change the location of the head office and may establish new branches if it desires so, but with the approval of the majority of sitting in the house.

serves a useful purpose. On a visit to the Bara Akhara and Naya Akhara at Haridwar and on subsequent inquiry, it was found that the administrative structure of these organisations was almost same except for the difference in the number of establishments, Mahants, sadhs, and chelas managing and looking after the khara, dera, Samadh, asthan, Gurudwara, temple, or dharmsalas. The Shri Mahant Shankar Das and Shri Mahant Raghu Muni who were present at that time along with Rajinder Das Kothari, of Bara Akhara, Haridwar confirmed that no difference between the two Akharas existed as far the organizational structure was concerned. The similar view was expressed by the Shri Mahant of Naya Akhara, Haridwar. As per his information; The Akhara is governed by a body, consisting of Sri Mahants, Mukhia Mahant, Kothari, Karobari, Mukami Mahants, Asthania Mahants, Nirvan, Vastradhari and local Mahants. The members of the different centres send their representatives who further elect the governing body.

2. Jhara Akhara: means a ceremony in which any new entrant after handing over every belonging moveable and immoveable owned by him to the Akhara swear by placing his hand on Gola Sahib that he shall follow all rules and regulations of the Akhara during the period of his membership and he will be maintained by the Akhara.

3. Shri Mahant: means the senior most Mahant among the Mukhiya Mahants who are elected in accordance with the rules mentioned hereafter. ‘Those who were honoured and respected by other Mahants were known as Shri Mahants.

4. Mukhia Mahant:- means four Mahants who are elected as such in accordance with the rules of the Akhara.

5. Mukami (Asthania Mahants) Local Mahants:- means those persons who are appointed in accordance with the rules of the Akhara and are entrusted with the management of the head office and the branches of the Akhara.

6. Nirvan:- means and includes all those Udâsîn sadhus who have joined the Akhara after performing the Jhara Akhara.

10. Tangtor: this title is given to any vastradhari on Kumbh or ardh kumbh when he attains majority.

From the above description it becomes clear that the Udâsî Akhara Bara has its own hierarchy of members and managers. The head priest in this category is Shri Mahant, who manages all the affairs of the Akharas and other establishments under him. Shri Mahants are those who are the holder of Uch Gaddi (the holder of Highest Position among Mahants) and are respected by the other provincial Mahants. He does not own any property or any institution under him.

Shri Mahant visits all the places related with the Akhara and stays there for a stipulated time. His stay is made comfortable and he is looked after by the Mahants or the other incharge, whatever may be the case, of the deras which he visits. He is always accompanied by many other Mahants and office bearers, who follow him throughout his religious journey. It served two purposes; one, it provided the opportunity to the head to be always on the move, thus leaving no time and scope for him to create dominance at one particular place, secondly it also kept a sort of vigil on the Mahants who look after and maintain the different shrines. It also inculcates a feeling of belongingness towards the organisation as a united whole and binds them together.

The dharmsalas generally consisted of a single room or two for the purpose of keeping the Adi-Granth and for providing accommodation to the Mahant, in the same structure or very close to it. The dharmsalas were inhabited and looked after by the Mahants. On enquiry from the Swami Shankra Das, Shri Mahant of Akhara Bara, Hardwar, Mahant Ravinder Das, Dera Bahadurpur, Hoshiarpur, and Mahamandleshwar Swami Shantanand, Pritam Bhawan Udāsīn Ashram Jalandhar, attached to Naya Akhara, informed that the dharmsla was a religious place of the Udāsīs and of the Sikhs; they also provided shelter to the travellers and religious persons who happen to pass by that area.\(^{46}\)

The deras, Akharas, Darbars and Gurdwaras were of considerable size and importance. They mainly consisted of three parts: the residential, the place of worship and the Samadhs of the important Mahants (attached only to some large centres)." The residential part contained an office of the Mahant and several other rooms for the accommodation of inmates and visitors." The large establishments, besides these three main buildings have many other rooms attached to it. These rooms serve the purpose of sarai, and also to accommodate the religious persons visiting the institutions. Even in the present time, Adi-Granth is the part and parcel of their daily religious practice.

Most of the Udāsi establishments had been and are still imparting religious education of elementary character. Today many of these establishments have opened up proper schools and some of the establishments are successfully running, even colleges, where the students of the different caste and creed are imparted education. G.W Leitner has given a detailed account of those Udāsi establishments which imparted religious education. The Udāsi establishments also had separate buildings for langar or sadabarts, were also attached to some centres. About a half a dozen Akhara and dharmsalas were well known for running the langar.

Some of the main features of the Udāsi Organizational structures were that Mahant was its main central authority. The management of the establishment, may it be dera, akhara, dharmsala, gurdwara, asthan, temple or samadh was under his sole authority. He was the chief manager, spiritual leader and guide to his disciples and followers. He managed the finances of the institutions and remained head till his death. Every Mahant had the right to appoint his successor from the senior most disciples. There had been instances where this hierarchy was ignored. Ganesh Das, the Mahant of Sadhu Bela Ashram Haridwar, informed that he had not decided his successor as he did not find any of his present disciple worth his successor. There were certain deras where the hierarchy was strictly observed like in case of Mahant Som Dass of Beli Ram Ashram who was appointed successor on basis of his seniority. Similarly Shri Mahant Shankar Das of Bara Akahar Haridwar was nominated successor on the basis of his being senior chela. But the Mahant of Sangalwala Akahar Anantanand was nominated due to his dedication and good conduct. As such there was no fixed rule for the nomination of the Mahant. Mahant of the centre was supposed to follow certain obligations and the main was to remain celibate throughout the period of his discipleship and Mahantship. There were also instances of the chelas and Mahants leading a family life. For example, Mahant of Dera Sham Chursi Hoshiarpur is married and both of his sons too are married. Similarly, Mahant of Gursharan Udāsin Dera in village Pharala near Behram in Banga in district Jalandhar, Harbhajan Das was a married man and his son Rajbir Das too was married. The main task of the Mahant was to maintain the institution, manage langar, provide food and clothes and accommodation to its inmates. Every institution is supposed to organize Sri Chand bhandara. It was also the duty of the Mahant to collect money for the maintenance and upkeep of the establishment. Every Mahant had varied number of disciples known as chelas. On inquiry, to know the whereabouts of the chelas, I was informed that most of them joined the institution after leaving their families for one reason or the other and after joining they cut off every kind of link with it. But there were some chelas like Shiv anand and Sham Das of Bara Akahara Haridwar who were still marinating contact with their families. Even young disciples varying in age from twelve to eighteen were seen staying in the centres. The common feature among all the centres was the presence of the cook and the helpers. They are the paid workers of the centres. It was noticed that the room of the Mahant and his clothes were managed by his chelas. Hierarchy of senior and junior chelas was noticed in almost all the establishments. Like Mahants these chelas were looked after by their subordinates. All the establishments though they were an independent unit in internal organization, management and functioning, but had a common link with one or the other central organization, which acted as parental body and governed all the centres falling under it. All the centres acted as unit under it and collectively united, managed and governed by the central authority. The organizational unity among the Udāsīs had developed in the early nineteenth century. The use of the term Panth indicated that they had common religious ideology, beliefs and practices. They were spiritually united with Baba Sri Chand revered Guru Nanak recited Matras, Adi-Granth and ball of ash or Gola Sahib. But in unity there were certain stark features which represented diversity existing among different Udāsīs providing separate identity to the organization.

The documentary evidence available in the early British revenue records, give the impression that there was no organizational unity amongst the Udāsīs. There is no indication of any central body to control and manage their centers. The study of these documents reveals, in fact, a sort of organizational atomism. There is hardly any doubt that the state treated each Udāsī centre as an independent unit.
CHAPTER-V

BELIEFS AND PRACTICES

_Udāsī _literature written during or before the 19th century, contains very meaningful information about _Udāsī _beliefs, ideas and attitudes towards Guru Nanak and his successors as well as their _bani _recorded in _Guru Granth Sahib_. As already mentioned, important among the available works include their expositions of the various compositions of the _Adi Granth_, the _Matras _written or compiled of their own; and their versions of the _Janamsakhis_ and _Gurbilases._\(^1\) The _Udāsī Bodh _compiled by Sant Rein towards the end of Sikh rule, appears in this connection to be more significant than any other available _Udāsī _work. Apart from expressing in detail the views of the _Udāsīs _in the theology and philosophy, it informs us about the early 19th century self-image of the _Udāsīs _as well as their popular attitudes, beliefs and practices.\(^2\)

Major R. Leech writing in 1840’s an account of the religion of the Sikhs and the sects inhabiting the Punjab, throws considerable light on the _Udāsīs _, their ideas and institutions, their peculiar tenets and practices.\(^3\) Some scattered or casual references to the customs, beliefs and practices of the _Udāsīs _are found in some other contemporary and near-contemporary works, both in English and _Gurmukhi_.\(^4\) Yet the fact remains that much of the information regarding beliefs and practices of the _Udāsīs _can be had only from the _Udāsī _literature, both published and unpublished.

Udasi works available on the lives of Sikh Gurus and their _bani _include Surat Ram Udasi’s _, Ustat Dasan Mebilan Ki_, MS 2300, Sikh History Research Library, Khalsa College, Amritsar; Sant Rein’s, _Nanak Vijay Granth_. It can be seen at Balapur Peeth in Akola district of Madhya Pardesh; Sadhu Bela Ashram Sakhar, Sindh; and a printed copy (partially published by Punjabi University Patiala); (MS, Sant Rein Ashram, Bhudan, Tehsil Malerkota, Sangrur); and Sewa Das Udasi’s _Purchian _(ed. The _Matras_ of the Udasis are found attributed to Sri Chand, Almast, Balu Hasna and Bhagat Bhagwan in _Matre Baba Sri Chand_ (MS 75, Rare Book Section, Guru Nanak Dev University, Amritsar); Commentaries on the _Bani _of the Sikh Gurus written around 1800 A.D. include Anand Ghan Udasi’s _Gurbani Tike _on _Japuji, Siddb Ghosht, Anand and Asa Di Var_, Rattan Singh Jaggi (ed.), Punjabi Bhasha Vibhag, Patiala 1970; Parmanand Udasi’s _Japuji Satik _in Hindi in the 1850; Amar Das Udasi wrote _Maniprabha_, a commentary on Sukhamani; _Bhai Mani Singh Wali Janamsakhi_ has been proved to be an Udasi work: Surjit Singh Hans, “Early Sikh Tradition”, _Journal Of Regional History_, Vol. I, 1980, p. 185.

2. _Udasi Bodh_, MS 1858, ff 319 ab. It was compiled in 1858 by Sant Rein, an eminent Udasi poet of the Sikh times. It is a Braj work, written in _Gurmukhi _script in verse. It consists of thirty two chapters, containing 2, 520 _slokas_.

3. “Notes on the Religion of the Sikhs and Other Sects inhabiting the Punjab”, _Foreign/Secret Consultation_, 20 December 1845, No. 144.

4. Notably among these are the works of H.H. Wilson, M.A., Sherring, Lepel H. Griffin; Ibbetson, Maclagan and Gaini Gian Singh.
Significantly, it may also be underlined that much of the existing Udâsî literature was written in the twentieth century after 1920’s, primarily due to the Akali Udâsî conflict for the purpose and control of the management of the Sikh Shrines.

The Udâsîs showed great reverence for Baba Nanak and his followers, the Nanak Panthis, and the Adi Granth. They did chant Kirtan Sohila, the Japuji and the Rehras of the orthodox Sikhs. They also chanted Matras of Sri Chand, along with compositions of Kabir, Mira Bai and Surdas. But for salvation they preferred Hindu Margas of Gyan, Karma and Bhakti. The Practice of keeping the Granth Sahib in Udâsî institutions was a common practice. The Udâsîs had an exceptional regard for Baba Sri Chand and Baba Gurditta, who were believed to have passed on Guruship to the adi-Udâsîs : Almast, Balu Hasna, Goinda and Phul. Sant Rein is of the view that Sankadik (the four sans of Brahma) appeared before Baba Gurditta at Kiratpur and the latter adopted them as his disciples and renamed them.

Furthermore, notwithstanding their reverence for Guru Nanak and the Adi Granth, the Udâsîs did not believe in the orthodox Sikh doctrine of the spiritual unity of the ten Sikh Gurus or the unity of Guruship. They subscribed to a principle of gnosis. By implication they believed that any Udâsî who ‘experienced’ God was as good as the Gurus. This is evident from the Gyan-Ratnavali, popularly attributed to Bhai Mani Singh but recently proved to be an Udâsî work of the period of Sikh rule.

Bhai Gurdas’s reference to the dehra established by Sri Chand and his followers at Kartarpur, (Dera Baba Nanak) after the death of his father, Guru Nanak, also shows their rejection of the principle of nomination to succession.¹⁰

Not only in their outward appearance and practices but also in their basic beliefs, the Udāsīs appear to have been heterodox.¹¹ In his doctoral work on Udāsīs entitled The Udāsīs Under the Sikh Rule (1780-1850 AD), Sulakhan Singh has clearly highlighted the Udāsīs as heterodox in terms of their doctrine and practices viz-a-viz the mainstream Sikhism.¹² He writes “The Udāsīs were clearly heterodox in terms of both doctrine and practice. Moreover, they were not even uniform in their outward appearance, dietary habits, and their objects and modes of worship”.¹³

The object of bhakti for the Udāsīs was the ‘Supreme Reality’. They believed that without ‘love’ and Bhaye of Brahm, Bhakti was not possible and without bhakti knowledge of God (gyan) and salvation (Mukti) was impossible.¹⁴ In this context the Udāsīs emphasized the importance of Bhakti.¹⁵ The combination of Bhakti and Gyan was perhaps a peculiar idea of the Udāsīs.\textsuperscript{16} But this did not minimize the importance of the Guru,\textsuperscript{17} rather Guru got precedence over the Vedas.\textsuperscript{18} Once acquired, gyan was never lost.\textsuperscript{19} The grace of Guru, was perhaps more than the grace of God, in attaining Gyan.\textsuperscript{20}

Both Brahmanand and Randhir Singh are in agreement about the use of Guru Granth Sahib by nearly all the Udāsīs.\textsuperscript{21} According to Randhir Singh, this was a proof of their being Sikhs. Brahmanand, however, argued that, Granth Sahib was used to propagate the ideas of the Vedas.\(^{22}\) He tried to prove that the Udāsīs were not Sikhs. They both refer to several practices and dress code.\(^{23}\) It is quite certain from this literary evidence, as also from contemporary evidence, that the Udāsīs did not conform to any single pattern. Multiplicity of religious practices was in use. All Udāsī mahants were not celibate either.

Indeed, besides the line of succession from Guru Nanak to Guru Gobind Singh, which was a nominal succession given to orthodox Sikh belief, the Udāsīs believed in a parallel, independent line of succession to the gaddi of Guru Nanak. They traced their spiritual links to Baba Sri Chand, through Baba Gurditta and the adi-Udāsī of the four Dhuans in the 17th century, till the line reached the living Mahants.\(^{24}\) Writing towards the close of the 18th century, Kesar Singh Chibbar makes reference to the darbars, or the two lines of succession, that of the Sikh Gurus and that of Sri Chand and his followers.\(^{25}\) The Udāsīs made certain claims which are historically difficult to uphold. Sant Rein has made an attempt to misinterpret history of the Sikh Gurus. For instance, they believed that Gurditta succeeded his father Guru Hargobind as the 7th Guru of the Sikhs and in turn nominated his son, Har Rai, the 7th Sikh Guru, as his successor. It appears, therefore, that the Udâsîs were averse to certain fundamental beliefs of orthodox Sikhism.

G.S. Ghurye writes that like Kabirapanthis and Dadupanthis among Vaishnavas, the Udâsîs and Nirmalas were in origin a reaction of synthesis to the impact of Islam. Though they were not opposed to idol-worship root and branch, yet the importance they gave to Guru Granth Sahib is not only a direct testimony to their Nanak Sahi affiliation but also a clear reflection of the imitation of the Islamic Quran. The selection of the combination of five Hindu deities, namely Shiva, Vishnu, Sun, Goddess Durga and Ganpati, by the Udâsîs also stamp them as reformists. It was an attempt to bypass bickerings and strifes over particular deities Shiva, Vishnu etc. The Udâsîs considered themselves Srautas, the followers of Sruti; and worshipped the ‘Pancayatana’, combination of five deities.

To differentiate themselves from other Sanyasis, their literature makes the rather curious statement that begging for alms and putting an ochre - coloured garments are the Udāsīs speciality as opposed to the staff-carrying of the Smarta Sanyasis (worshippers of siva).²⁸

The Philosophy of the Udāsī ascetics is the same monistic Vedanta as that of the Dasnamis. Whenever there was any discussion on the Vaishanva ascetics, the Udāsīs favoured the Saiva Sadhus.²⁹

The Udāsīs did not believe in the dual Sikh doctrine of Guru-Granth and the Guru-Panth or that Guruship was vested in the Panth and the Granth after Guru Gobind Singh.³⁰ Though the Udāsī interpretation of Sikhism was Vedantic, they were not averse to the idea of the Guru-Granth, which helped the ruling classes more than the idea of the Guru-Panth.³¹ The author of the Gyan-Ratavali sets aside even the idea of *Guru-Granth*³² Instead, he harps on the idea of Sabad being God.

Notwithstanding the reverence shown to the sacred Sikh scripture, the Udāsīs believed in the Vedas, the Puranas and the Shastras. In addition, they had their Matras, attributed to Sri Chand, Almast, Balu Hasna and Bhagat Bhagwan. These Matras expound their code of conduct, the way in which they were supposed to live, emphasizing the qualities of the inner-self rather than the formal outward symbols.³³

Their attempt to equate the Matras of Sri Chand with the Japuji of Guru Nanak in spiritual power clearly shows their being heterodox. Their versions of the Janamsakhis and Gurbilases, reveal their unorthodoxy. In this connection, we may refer to the Gyan Ratnavali attributed to Bhai Mani Singh and to Sukha Singh’s Gurbilas Dasvin Patshahi. The Udāsīs even stake their claim to the earliest extant copy of the Adi Granth as their own book.

In Udāsi Bodh, they gave their own exposition of their origins and background, apart from explaining their views on concepts like Dukh, Pap, Pun, Karam, Vairag, Brahm, Narak, Swarg, the five kosh, the evils and the creation of the world.

In their initiation ceremony, the Udāsīs differed from the Sikhs. The novice was supposed to drink the water in which the toes of five Udāsi Mahants were washed; he was to follow the instructions of Baba Sri Chand and to wear bhagven or salmon-coloured clothes. He was also told to avoid two temptations: gold and women. His name was changed, and the new name generally ended with Das or Brahm. At the end of the ceremony, the sweetmeat called halva was distributed among those present.

The spirit being a complete dedication to the Guru after being initiated. At the time of initiation if a novitiate is ordained a Naga or a naked ascetic, he is given a name which ends in Dasa or Sarana, suffixes which are otherwise peculiar to the Vaishnava
Bairagis. If the initiation is for the Paramahansa variety, the disciple receives a name which ends in Ananda.\textsuperscript{42}

When Almast was asked by a Nath that what kind of clothes the Udåsî wear, he answered “Shah, Sufaid, Zard, Surkhai, Jo Le Pahere so Gurbhai”. Means ‘Shah’ (a Persian word meaning a sadhu), or a sadhu who wears white, Bhagwa (ochre), and Surkh (red) clothes is an Udåsî.\textsuperscript{43} In the beginning Udåsî Sadhus used to wear less clothes to cover the body. To protect themselves from winter they used to lit fire or dhuni. The smoke or fire acted as an indictor of their presence.

When Bhai Gurdas in his Var 1/24 writes शह, सुफाई, झड़दार, जो ले पहरे सो गुर्भई he means, that Baba (Nanak) changed his attire and looked like Udåsî. He also wanted that this new look should not be mistaken as a Sikh. To make this clear he further wrote.

When Baba Nanak came back from his religious journey to Kartarpur, he once again changed his attire (took off the Udåsî attire). From the old paintings of Guru Nanak, it looks that Guru Nanak used to wear seli and topi and ochre coloured clothes but when he came and settled down, he shifted to ordinary (white) clothes. On the other hand, the paintings of Sri Chand present him in nacked form. He is shown having long hair, without beard and mustaches (clean shaven)\textsuperscript{44}, loin clothes (Kopin) and seli on the body. On the way to Pilibhit, Guru Hargobind came across Swami Ram Das, who presented Guru Hargobind his Jaap Maal and ochre coloured clothes. When Almast was given the charge of centre of Pilibhit, he was presented the same gifts by Guru Hargobind which he had received from Swami Ram Das. As such the usage of the ochre clothes in Udåsî Samparda was started by Swami Ram Das. By झुंग्‌दारी नींद्र Bhai Gurdas means the use of ochre coloured clothes by Guru Nanak. Sri Chand was not at all considerate about clothes and he remained naked except for Kopin. What kind of clothes Baba Gurditta, a house holder, wore are not known.

The present incumbent of Dera Guru Ram Rai or Dera Maru Das, Alawalpur district Jalandhar, Mahant Piara Das and the present incumbent of Bahadurpur Dera in Hoshiarpur, Mahant Raminder Das, in a personal interview on 21 June, 2008 supported the same view that even if commonly Ochre colour is worn but Udåsî are permitted to wear any of these four colours i.e. Shah (black), Sufaid (White), Zarad (Bhagve or Ochre) and Surkh (red).

According to Mohinder Kaur, Guru Hargobind, the 6th Guru started the system of wearing ochre coloured clothes among the Udasîs and it continues till date. If other Udasîs (besides Sri Chand) were wearing clothes it is not much known to us and even if they were wearing clothes they were not particular about the colour of clothes. On my personal visit to Amritsar, Hoshiarpur, Jalandhar and many other Udasî establishments, I noticed that generally the Udasîs wore ochre or white coloured clothes so much so, that the uniform of Swami Sant Das School, attached to the Pritam Bhawan Udasîn Ashram, Jalandhar, is also saffron coloured. It is important to understand and look into the beliefs, practices and social contribution which the Udasîs have made to the society rather than their attire. They cover their head with topi (cap) or pagri (turban). In summers the cap is made of cotton cloth and in winters Mahants wore woolen cap. They also wear seli (mala or necklace) of black colour and majithi chola.

Generally Sadhus are of three types: Grahist, who are householders, wear Gerua clothes and are holders of some Gaddis. Secondly, those who are not householders and who appoint their successor before death. Thirdly, nirvan sadhus who don’t wear Gerua clothes, rather wear Langoti, smear Bhasm and keep long Jata.45 Pandit Brahmanand Udasin in Udasin Mat Darpan also refers to those Udasîs who get married as ‘Sant Udasî’ and those who never get married as ‘Sadhu Udasî’.46

The new entrant would drink charanamat, tie langot, given ash bath, put a tilak, given seli (mala) pagri (topi, turban or head gear) and Brahmanchal (cloth), Guru mantra by his guru, some hair of head were shorn, made to recite Shri Chandra Mantra and Guru Pranali, gets a new name with his new birth (as his parents and family relations exist no more). He now was thanks the gathering and other Mahants, he is served Prasad and Bhagwa cloth to wear through out his life. A Bhandara is held in the name of Sri Chandra and Rot Prasad is served to the new entrants. They were made to bow to Dhuan and Samads. Even the grahist members could also join Udasî sect and were known, as ‘Sewak’. After the function was over these ‘Sewaks’ were served Prasad only.47 The new entartants were to recite Onkar along with Vedas. They are of two types: Nirvan and Paramhans.48 Nirvan keep long hair (Jatadhari) put ash on their body, use seli, topi, toomba, band, mrigchala (deer hide), Gola Sahib, Chip, Kopin, Mekhala and use dhuni. They keep travelling from one place to another, make disciples and preach teachings of Udasi sect. Paramhans adopt Kopin and go about naked. They do not carry danda, Kamandal and clothes. Nothing like sorrow or happiness disturbs them. Even wearing clothes or taking bath becomes immaterial. They believe in existence of soul in every living being. Udasi Sants are of two types: Chaturthasharmi and Grahist. Chaturthasharmi are further of six types: Kuteechak (are of 3 kinds: those who reside in Kutia, Snandhari and Mathadhish).

There were no distinct restrictions on hair. Some wore it long as matted, others kept short. The matted hair symbolized their renunciation of worldly life and comforts. They may go to the extent of remaining naked and smear ash on their bodies, again symbolizing their death to the world of family relations, business and caste.

The Udasis are known to have worshipped the idol of Sri Chand and the samadhs of their Mahants, in addition to the Adi-Granth, the Hindu scriptures and the idols of Shiva or Vishnu.50 They also worshipped Charanpadika and Nishan Sahib.51 The practice of worshipping the ball of ash (gole di Puja) was popular among the Udasi followers of Sangat Sahib and the nanga Udasi followers of Pritam Das.52 The Udasis recited some selected chbandas or couplets from their own Satotar or Panch Parmeshar immediately after their daily evening Aarti, or the waving of the lamps, was over.53

The nath influence is evident in some of the Udasi ideas, customs and beliefs. They accorded a particular loyalty to the doctrines and practices of the hatha-yoga, although the respect for these doctrines extended beyond the limited Udasi circle.54

Only those who were honest, simple cultured, gentle, noble, far sighted, well versed in teachings and who had a complete control over emotions were selected as Mahants; Jagannatha Sharma, Udasi Samparda Ke Hindi Kavi aur Unka Sahitya, pp. 48, 49, 53; Harinam Das Udasin, Jagad Guru Sri Chandra Ji Ki Matra Steek, pp. 71-72.

The practice of constructing simple hearths (dhuni or dhuan) was a nath practice which had been appropriated by the Udāsī sadhus and subsequently the word dhuan was extended to designate Udāsī establishment.55 Significantly, the practice of dhuni or continuous smouldering fire was an integral feature of the earliest known Udāsī centers termed as four Dhuans. Their practice of dhuni or continuous fire and belief in doctrines and practices of hatha yoga clearly indicate their unorthodoxy.

Udāsīs believed in the unity of brahm.56 They believed in Nirguna (attributeless) and Saguna (with attributes).57 He is Saguna, being the creator of the universe.58 The Udāsīs believed that the universe created and protected by the brahm is maya.59 They believed that maya makes human ‘desire’ unreal.60 The practical manifestations of brahm are ‘wealth, women, sons, power, status, comfort and food’ which call forth man’s lust, greed and pride.61 The Udāsīs did chant the select bani of was carried in a procession along with beating of drums and chanting of bhajans. A heavy stone was tied to the body and it was immersed in water or given to the fire. On the third day of cremation the remains were collected and immersed in Ganga. Some buried the dead and constructed a samadhi over it, and kept a placard indicating the birth and death. The last rites performed by the Udāsī at the death of the Udāsi Sants were quite similar to the Vedic traditions.90

The Udāsī professed no interest in the worldly affairs91 and the political gains.92 Their only concern was with religious pursuits. But there were some references during the second half of the nineteenth century, of such Udāsi Sants who remained intact within the establishments and did not adhere to the religious pursuits.93 Many of the Udāsī moved from one place to another during their wandering years, but did come back to their original place of stay afterwards.94 The places like Amritsar, Dera Baba Nanak and Katarpur find special mention in this context.95 It was assumed that there were about three hundred and seventy centers of the Udāsī in Northern India.96

The Udāsī were supposed to follow renunciation (udas) and to practise celibacy. The Nanga Udāsī were said to have followed this practice sternly.97 However marriage was not uncommon among the Udāsī in general.98 In the Ludhiana district, the British settlement officer found some Udāsi families, notably that of Jaspal Bangar, following the custom to marry. The law of succession of the gaddi of the Mahant, however, generally remained the same: from the Guru to the chela. The eldest son did not succeed to the gaddi as a matter of course. Significantly, however, the Mahants rarely married because by doing so they could loose their influence among the people. Their institutions were sooner or later turned into private residences closed to strangers and needy people. The majority of the Udāsīs were ascetic, only some of them were found engaged in secular pursuits.

In their appearance, the Udāsī did not conform to the symbols of the Sikhs. Their various Orders had some distinctive marks and practices. In the early 19th century, H.H. Wilson found them generally well dressed, seldom dispensing with clothes altogether. Major R. Leech, however, noticed two groups of naked (nange) Udāsīs: the Nirban and the Niranjania. Both owed their origin to Pritam Das. They wore only loin-cloths and smeared their bodies with ash to protect them from both extremes of temperature. The Udāsīs of the bakhshishes of Bhagat Bhagwan and Sangat Sahib showed special reverence for the ashes. They used seli (cord) and topi (cap), kharavan (pettions). Phulmala (rosary of flowers) jholi (bag), tumba (dried pumkin) and black asan. The Diwane Udāsīs were distinguished by the necklace of shells they usually wore round the pagri (turban).

The Udāsī of the bakhshish of Bhagat Bhagwan wore a janjir (chain) round the waist and smeared their body with ashes. It may be added here that during his travels into the Punjab in the early 19th century, William Moorcroft remarked about the simple living of the Udāsīs in general, ‘he had never met with persons of more simple, unaffected and pious manners than the Udāsīs’.

H.H. Wilson observed that they kept moustaches and beard and were of very attractive appearance. However, the Udāsī of Bhagat Bhagwan wore jattan (hairlocks). Diwane Udāsī used to cut their hair and blackened their faces.

The Udāsī generally ate what was cooked by others, irrespective of their caste of creed. The Sangat Sahibia Udāsī, however, were supposed not to eat with others. The Bhagat Bhagwanias were supposed to follow Guru Nanak’s precepts regarding their dietary habits. Generally, the Udāsī were supposed to abstain from making any use of flesh, spirits and tobacco. On a festive occasion, in order to call the visitors gathered in for eating food, they used to call out unnnki Puja karo Nanak nirbani.

The Udāsī were clearly heterodox in terms of both doctrine and practice and they were not uniform in their outward appearance, dietary habits, and their objects and modes of worship. As a missionary of the Udāsī tradition, Sant Rein has given enough space to the history of its origin and growth in terms or a ‘Panth’. He sought patronage from his contemporary Sikh rulers by way of representing the Udāsī tradition as a tradition of the ‘Nanabhans’ i.e. the ‘Nanakpanthis’, the followers of Guru Nanak. By doing all this he was perhaps not only seeking patronage from his contemporary Sikh ruling classes and landed aristocracy, but also was definitely widening his social base among the people of different strata of society during the late 18th and early 19th centuries.

We are in a position to know more about the views of the Udāsī regarding the nature of God and several other concepts of theology and philosophy such as maya, bhakti, mukti, vairag, atman, janan or gyan, karam or the theory of transmigration of the soul, pap, pun, dukh, and the five evils i.e. kam, krodh, lobh,

A close analysis of the Udāsi Bodh brings to light the Udāsi response to the evils prevalent in the social milieu in early 19th century. Apart from expressing in detail the views of the Udāsis on theology and Philosophy, it informs about the early 19th century self-image of the Udāsis as well as their popular attitudes, beliefs and practices.117

The analysis of the religious ideology and beliefs of the Udāsis shows their compromise with both Hindu and Sikh religious systems of thought. Their theological and Philosophical ideas and beliefs are very largely based on Hindu and Sikh scriptures particularly the Vedas, the Bhagvatgita and the Adi Granth of the Sikhs. It may not be unsafe to say that in regard to their religious beliefs and Philosophical ideas, they appeared to be more close to the Hindu thought, particularly the Vedantic schools of Philosophy, although their acceptance or recognition of the fundamental ideas of Sikh thought propounded by Guru Nanak can not be denied or ignored altogether. Their unorthodoxy or heterodoxy, appears partly to have been the result of their attempt to work out a compromise.

CHAPTER-VI

HISTORICAL ANALYSIS OF UDĀŚĪ LITERATURE

The Udāśī literature is not only the earlier specimen of preaching in prose, but also a source material for the history of medieval Punjab. A significant aspect of this literature is that it helps us to teach goodness through literature having biographical elements. It consists of various forms such as the Udāśī Matre, the biographies of Baba Sri Chand, exposition of the Bani recorded in the Adi-Granth, works on Udāśī doctrine and history and the twentieth century polemical Udāśī works and as such it provides valuable insights on polity, society, and culture of the times. It is available in numerous religious and non-religious forms. Baba Sri Chand’s compositions particularly pertain to Udāśī cult, its obligations and practices; the works of the twentieth century writers like Brahmanand and Randhir Singh particularly relate to the socio-political and religious conditions of the 20th century, which considerably affected the course of Udāśī history vis-z-vis the main stream Sikh history. The chapter has been divided into two major sections; the first contains the writings of seventeenth and eighteenth century writers starting with its founder Baba Sri Chand and others, and the second section covers the works of nineteenth and twentieth century writers depicting their different moods and shades of polity, society, religion and culture of that time.

The Udāśī literature begins with the works attributed to Baba Sri Chand which include Matre Shastra, Aarta, Guru Gayatri, Sahansarnama, Matravani and commentaries on the Vedas, the Upnishdas. The term Matra has many explanations to its name. The word is derived from Sankrit language and means ‘measure of any kind, metrical unit, a more or prosodial instant i.e., the length of time required to pronounce a short vowel, a diacritical mark etc.’ But in Udāśī literature, Matra has a special connotation. It stands for incantation, a sacred text; or the sacred magical or a sacred formula addressed to the deities; a mystical verse or a counsel to the disciple, charm or spell etc. It also conveys the sense of treatise and commentary, the gospel and preaching of the Udāsī Sadhus. According to another explanation, the word Matra, is a mixture of two words; Maa and tra, the former stands for Maya and the latter means the protector, i.e., one who protects from Maya. Matra is also termed as ‘Karnbhushan’ meaning an ornament for those, who are in search of truth. In other words, the Matra is the jewellery or the property of the Udāsī. It is a parameter to assess a Sadhu, as it contains those guidelines which give directions to a Sadhu about the code of conduct to be followed by him.

The main themes of these Matras, stress the significance of Naam Simran and direct the disciples to lead a simple, detached life and strive for social welfare and to follow the Adhyatam Marga (The Mystic Path) for the attainment of Mukti or Nirvan (salvation). The Udāsī believe, that by reciting the Matras daily and after gaining the tatgyan (the core idea) of the Matra, one can get rid of one’s ignorance (Agyan). Enlightenment with the knowledge of Brahm Gyan (spiritual knowledge of the highest truth) the Jeev (the Human Soul) can get freedom from the shackles of Ava Gaman (cycle of rebirth) and can get Nirvan from the worldly existence. According to Udāsī, cultivation of the Matra in real practice leads to the highest attainment of Udāsi Dharma (the path of the Udāsī) which is to become Paramhansa (The liberator soul). Bhai Mani Sigh’s Gian Ratnawali shows, that any Udāsī who has experienced God was as good as the Guru.

Matras vary in number as several of their versions are available in Gurmukhi, Hindi, and Devnagari literature. The Hindi version is the attempt made therein to establish an invariable connection of these Matras to Puranic mythology in order to emphasize and to legitimize the Hindu origin of the Udāsī. On the whole, Gurmukhi literature of the Udāsī refers to the Matras of Guru Nanak, Baba Sri Chand, Baba Gurditta, Almast, Balu Hasna, Bhagat Bhagwan, and various other Udāsī sants. The Devnagari literature of the Udāsī abounds primarily in the Matras attributed to Sri Chand alone. These Matras are found in various works of the Udāsī with little or slight variation. Though presumably written during the eighteenth or early nineteenth centuries, the Matras contain very useful information on the Udāsi code of conduct (code of discipline) or their religious morals and ethics which they were supposed to observe in their daily life. The Udāsi Matras hold a special significance relating to the problem of the origin and foundation of the Udāsi fold.

Udāsi Matras or Matre is a collection of hymns ascribed to the founder of the Udāsi sect, Baba Sri Chand. They contain the teachings of the Udāsi preachers and the practices to be followed by the Udāsi sadhs. In fact, Matre serve as useful information on Udāsi code of conduct, their morals, ethics and their way of life.

The text of the Matras attributed to Guru Nanak is composed in Sadhukari or Sant Bhasha and is found in Gurmukhi script, which is considered to be original. The full text contains sixteen stanzas. Some of the Udāsi sources quote only first seven stanzas. Therefore, it is presumed that the principal Matra attributed to Guru Nanak comprised of only seven stanzas and rest is just an epilogue of the major text. It claims to define the cosmos, the nature of, ultimate reality and the attributes of God. The ultimate reality is described as transcendent as well as immanent in relation to mundane world. It is visualized through the Jap (meditation) of the Sat Nam (true name) with the help of the Guru. This higher reality reveals itself to man, to enlighten him with Udāsi (detachment) the highest stage of spiritual transformation depicted as mystical union with God. The attainment of mystical union with God comes as the culmination or the perfection of the spiritual developments which is the merging of individual Sanyasi (mendicant) into the Sohang Akhar (the word of identity with God). The spiritual path of Udāsi dharm transforms an ordinary person into an avdhut or enlightened soul. Mukti (salvation) is not to be found in any mechanical submission to any particular sacred text, Shastras, Vedas, or Puranas etc., but through Udāsi Karma (or action befitting Udāsi ). The putative spiritual attainment is truly achieved by Sahaj (renunciation). The true detachment of an ascetic is that of a person who keeps his desires under restraint and seeks the truth. The path of the Udāsi was open to all, irrespective of caste.

8 The text of the Matras attributed to Guru Nanak purport to be an original work, but is really a compilation: Madanjit Kaur, “Udasi Matras”, Seminar Papers on Baba Sri Chand Ji, pp. 31, 32.
9 Sant Rein, Udasi Bodh, Manuscript 1858, Guru Nanak Heritage Centre and Archival Cell, Guru Nanak Dev University, Amritsar, f 203.

The Matra Shastra of Baba Sri Chand contains thirty six stanzas, having the core subject of those ideas and issues which are fundamental to Udâsi thought and tradition. Matras comprise answers to various questions put by the Sidhas to Baba Sri Chand on various issues pertaining to his mode of dress, his religious symbols, his antecedents, name of his Guru, motto of his spiritual research, mission of his life and destination. It is comprised in Nagari language and is found in Gurmukhi and Devnagari Scripts.

Some Matras of Sri Chand are found in Sri Prakash Granth, a copy of which is kept at present in the famous Udâsi centre, Dera Baba Ram Rai at Dehra Doon. The prominent Matras in the Sri Prakash Granth are strong evidence of the fact that Baba Sri Chand imbibed the knowledge of metaphysics from his father Guru Nanak in perfection. It is also recorded in the Matra Shastra that Baba Sri Chand received Bij Mantrs (the first original Syllable of the Matra) from Guru Nanak, though the Udâsi tradition maintains that Avinashi Muni was Sri Chand’s teacher. Madanjit Kaur writes, “Sri Chand, in his Matras, discloses his identity only as son of Nanak and not as a prophet or founder of a new faith. This position is reinforced by the fact that Baba Sri Chand was neither a rebel nor he was hostile to the religious system founded by his father. He had selected his own way of life. He was neither rejected by his father nor did he protest against his selection of Guru Angad to the Gurugaddi of Nanak”. To prove her point she states, “Baba Sri Chand composed one hundred and twenty five (125) stanzas in praise of Guru Nanak, under the title Guru Nanak Sainsrnama, ruled out all such possibilities”. There is no denying the fact that Sri Chand admired and respected Guru Nanak, as a spiritual teacher and preacher and he never had any conflict in preaching the doctrines of his father and never went against his wishes as far as nomination and selection of Guru Angad was concerned. It is also noted that he was not having cordial relations with Guru Angad and other three who followed him.

11 There are different versions associated with the origin of Matra Shastra attributed to Baba Sri Chand. According to one version, during his travels in the Chamba hills in Kartik Sudi 5, Samvat 1723, i.e 1666 A.D., Baba Sri Chand had a goshti (dialogue) with the Sidhas (like Bharthari, Gorakhnath, Achhal Nath, Kandhari Nath, Rattan Nath etc.). The questions asked and the answers given formed the contents of these Matras. According to another version, during his travels in Kashmir, while Baba Sri Chand was visiting Srinagar on a full moon night of Asrar Samvat, 1680 BK i.e 1623 A.D., he initiated his disciples in Matra Shastra (incantations): Matra Baba Sri Chand, Manuscript No. 75, ff 516-519; Also see, Madanjit Kaur, “Udasi Matras”, Seminar Paper on Baba Sri Chand Ji, p. 33; See Appendix I.
as the successors of Guru Nanak. The cordiality in relations of Baba Sri Chand with Sikh Gurus developed during the time of Guru Hargobind when he chose Baba Gurditta, the married man and a son of Guru Hargobind for preaching those doctrines. Baba Gurditta in his Matra establishes Guru Nanak as, the Guru of Baba Sri Chand. The historical facts prove that Sri Chand was not having good relations with Guru Angad Dev and it was Guru Amar Das who emphatically separated Udāsī from the Sikhs.¹³

Out of thirteen Matras ¹⁴ of Baba Sri Chand, the first is considered to be the most important. Udāsī Sants and followers learn it by heart and daily recite it. Though it is brief in size but it has got a meaningful substance and conveys the essence of the whole context. The introductory part of the Matras conveys that Sri Chand was destined to be a Sanyasi and was initiated by the Satguru, who directed him to come to the Civic State of the world. The proof of the Udāsī claim is presented and explained in the main body of the Matra. The concluding part gives the reader the final thought on the subject. The feelings of National consciousness, social upliftment and the desire to uplift the village society can be seen in the writings of Sri Chandra’s Matra Shastra. The Matra Shastras contains solution to many contemporary problems. This Shastra gives simple and understandable version of some complicated spiritual traditions and questions so that the general public may obtain fullest knowledge of complicated and hard to understand spiritual intentions, to attain eternal bliss and enjoy human life with full contentment.

This conversation makes it clear that when Baba Sri Chand went to celebrate Shiv Ratri at Achal Batala the aged Sidhas were inquired from Sri Chand about his Guru who gave him Guru Mantra (Moonda- initiated him into the sect) and had brought him into the Udāsī fold. (Moondaayaa). Sri Chand replied with great courage and humility ignoring the disrespectful utterings’s of these aged ascetics that he had come to the city (Nagri) with the permission of his Guru (Sadguru and guide)

He removed all the misgivings from the minds of the Sidhas and assured his followers that he had come to fulfill three vows i.e. to alert (chetahu) the general public and the simple hearted people of the cities who were dozing in deep slumber; to help them swim across (tarahu) the ocean of worldly passions and illusions; and to meditate (Simrahu naam) and make people meditate the sacred name of the Alakh Purush (formless God), the omnipotent and invisible God to remind people of his all invading presence. The purpose of his visit was to awaken the people to the realities of Nam. Baba Sri Chand devoted his long life to meditation, preaching Nam and morals, spiritual and religious uplift of society, helping the poor, the down-trodden and those in need:

श्री मत्रा भवति भव संदर्भ

This Universe has been created according to the will of Almighty, Avinashi (imperishable)\(^{16}\). He has set in motion all the play in this world and has engaged different actors for different roles to play. Sri Chand is thankful to his Guru for showing him the path of Agam (difficult to tread, where one cannot reach easily) and Nigam (Vedas).

One must put on godri (jacket made up of patched up cloth) of self knowledge, a cap, (topi)\(^\text{17}\) of forgiveness (khima), and a tag of high character. The subjection of passion (yat) is my Aadband (cover). Sri Chand advises to wear Langoti or loin cloth (to cover private parts) made of Sheel (good conduct). In the above lines the stress is laid on implementation of gyan, khima, jat, sheel, and sat, by the devotee, a true attributes of a Udãsî Sadh.

God is Akal (indestructible), beyond the boundaries of death and time. He is the creator of time so out of bounds for time. Such Khintha (patched cloth) is for ever and is imperishable. This Khintha keeps me free from all bondages. Sidhas keep a bag or jholi to collect alms. Sri Chand says that his jholi is Niraash (desireless, empty) and a heart devoid of all desires. He has worn the tope (cap) of yukti (tactics) of being one with the creator. The language spoken by Guru is Gurmukhi boli (language) and not the Punjabi language.

Religion is my chola (attire/cloak), sat (righteous or truth) through mind thought and deeds, seli (sacred thread of black wool) around the neck by the Nirvana saints. Nothing is greater than the truth itself. Sri Chand said he had adopted Maryada (rules of good conduct), and Mekhlaa (griddle belt) in place of Kafni (shirt made of cloth). Decorum and self restriction is my griddle.

I keep the batua (purse) of dhian (meditation) always with me. He calls Brahma (God) as his Anchlaa (cover, protector). Sri Chand has explained ethics and morality as kafni, concentration (dhian) as Batua and detachment as Mor Chhad.\(^\text{18}\)

Nirleap (Unattachedness) is my whisk, mor chhad (a whisk made of peacock feathers for flapping away flies). To tie up such a divine whisk one needs a Jang dora (a thread with which the peacock whisk is tied), of Nirbhav (without fear). This state of fearless love is our string to tie the mor chhad of divine nature. This mor chhad is free from Naakoo (worldly contamination) dushti (malevolent towards none).

To jaap (meditate) for welfare of others is my jangota (underwear of deer skin covering the thighs), and sift (praise) of God almighty is my Udaani (flight). Singi (blow made of animal horn) is the mystical sound or anahad shabd (unheard sound that the yogis try to hear in their Smadhi), and the teachings of my Guru is Guruvaaani for me.

The pleasure of attainment of one’s self form is my Mudra (ear ring). Sri Chand advised the seeker to wear the mudra of sharam (grace/modesty), the vibhoota (ash) of Shiva (welfare concept) which acts as mind soother. It purifies the inner self and marches towards the great life. Hari Bhakti (devotion to God) is my Mrigani (deer skin). Bhakti is the instrument to attain darshan. Sri Chand cautions that mere sitting on spread deer skin does not qualify a seeker to have a glimpse of almighty meaning the deer skin is the stair case of devotion which ascends towards almighty.

The Gyan godri (jacket made up of patched cloth of pure knowledge) is soot (cotton) woven with dhaagey (threads) of santokh (contentment) and renunciation of vivek (judicial assessment) of reasoning of good and bad aspects of life. The godri has anek (many) tallis (patches of rags) of different qualities sewn over it and which makes it look beautiful. It means a life full of contentment is that cotton cloth upon which the seeker of truth patches up different good qualities with the help of a thread of his judicious brain.\(^\text{20}\)

The sadhus wearing siyaah (black), sufaid (white), zarad (yellow or ochre colour) and surkhaayee (red) are four colours of four Varans (Brahmin, Kshatriya, Vaishya and Shudra) are all brothers by virtue of precept oral affinity. Means, a Sadhu may wear (pahire) any of these four colours may be from any caste or creed is welcome to Sri Chand’s fraternity (Guru Bhai). His above Matra indicates towards idea of universal brotherhood and fraternity. According to him, God created man and society as a whole. He wanted to end up the bickerings of the society and to follow the path of humanity. For Him all are one. He desires that human being in the society should also live under the same terms and conditions without falling into the false beliefs of caste and creed. He believed that originally there existed no such difference between the human beings. It was man made and as such it should be done away with.

We lit (Jalai) the fire of Sukh (pleasures) and dukh (pains) within our deh (body) with the help of chakamak (striking fire stones) of the trehgun (three basic qualities) Rajo, Sato and Tamogun. In this sacred dhuni (fire) burn the pleasures and pain along with the seeds of earned deeds so that there remains no hope of future birth and death for you.\(^\text{21}\)

To work with sayyam (contentment or self control) is our kapali (begging bowl) and our surat (meditation or concentration) is always upon the charan-kamal (lotus feet) of my lord.

I have taken the bhojan (food) of good intentions and it has worked like amrit (nectar) for me. It has not given me the idea of being of good taste or bad taste. In the Matra, Sri Chand explains the importance of food. He says that one should take food for the body requirement and not for the sake of taste of the tongue. In other words it means the simplicity of man in life.

The utensils of Sadhs are made of wood and mud like Karmandal, Tumba and Kishti. The above utensils mentioned by Sri Chand are the symbols and real property of an ascetic. It helps him in his religious journey to prepare food and to accumulate water in time of need.

A pure mind is a pyalaa (a cup) for drinking amrit (nectar) of God’s name. Whosoever, jo peevey (drinks) the amrit of Guru’s teachings is relieved of the worldly heat and is liberated. He attains eternal peace in a befitting manner.

The real power, the vital breath moves in ida and pingala and resides in shushumana (three important nerves described by the hathyogi). Thus describes the general theory of pranayaam. To let in the breadth through ida nerve to hold it for some time and then release it through the opening of pingala nerve. This way with the practice of purak (to fill in) and rechak (let out) one is able to open the door of sushman nerve. This practice helps the seeker to hold him is sehaj (equilibrium) position.\textsuperscript{22}

We should desirelessly contemplate in the pessimistic monastery of his name. the seeker lives in the Math (house) of mind, which is niraash (desireless calm), practices smadhi and dhian meditates continuously (nirantar) on the inseparable soul, resides in the city of God (Brahm nagri) devoid of darkness of ignorance and enlightened by the light provided (Gyan) by the Guru who has experienced God himself.

Stability of mind (Sthir) is seekers prosperity (Ridhi). Immortality (amarpad) is our stuff made of wood (danda). Dheeraj (patience) is our (Fahuri) is our axe and penance (tap) is our khanda (a double edged sword).

To subdue the ten organs is our aasaa (wooden stuff), equanimity (sumdrishti) that negates the thoughts of jubilation and bereavement that equipoise is our support (chogaan) that puts to end the idea of joy and sadness (harsh shokh).

Mohini (alluring) maya (worldly attachments and attraction) makes man miserable. A detached person becomes happy after coming out of web of maya (tyaag). Only such person can work for the progress and welfare of the society and country. Worldly desires, maya, lust for women and worldly possessions, laziness, anger and egoism were to be replaced by humility, sacrifice, truthfulness, kindness, contentment and strong will power.

The name of God works like Paakhar (a stick), a kavach (shield) or an amulet, for such a renounces. We should control the horse of breathing with the bridle of detachment from evil deeds. Karma (deeds) does not tie up a person but it is the desire behind that deed that proves to be a catch hold. Desireless deeds are like the saddle of the horse. In order to fix the bridle of detachment of deeds some kind of belt (tang) is needed. So we have to provide a belt of tatva-ka-joda (belt of leather which joins) the horse (of breath) and bridle (of detachment of deeds) and hold them together. God helps to keep them together.

Our Janeu (sacred thread) is Akhand (unbreakable), our dhoti (lower cloth) is spotless. We worship the Sohang Mantra (the basic maxim of the Vedantic philosophy identifying the individual with the Supreme being on the beeds of truth).

The teachings imparted by Guru is an important aspect of learning in the life of a Sadhu. It is the Guru who gives the name (Naam ka Jaap). The knowledge attained though the learning and recitation of Gayatri Mantra will lead one to a blissful and permanent abode.

Concentration of mind in God’s name is the ornamental religious tilak (vermillion mark) on our forehead. Yash (fame and glory) is offering of water to our deceased ancestors as tarpan (a mark of gratification). Prem (love) is our worship (puja). Maha Ras (eternal bliss) is our bhog (food).

Udāsī Munis could move about according to the time and the country of their choice wearing Choorha (a lock of hair on the top of head by an ascetic), and breaking (tora) all the bonds shackles (Janzir) of outer sectarian symbols. Sri Chand in this Matra refers to his father respectfully as Nanak Shah Faquir.

By locking his matted hair rolled up over the head (Jatta Joot) like a crown (Mukut). He undoes (Mukta) all the bondages (Bandhan) of rebirth and attain salvation.

By way of conclusion we can say that these words and Mantras for salvation (Jugat) have been spoken by Sri Chand, son of Guru Nanak (Nanak Poota) for the salvation of mankind.

Whosoever worships this Matra with true devotion should surely attain Aava Gaman (Nirvan - the extinction). Baba Sri Chand stressed that spiritualism and understanding oneself were essential for the uplift of humanity. Spiritual pursuit and self improvement were especially stressed by Sri Chand.

Various expositions of the Bani of the Sikh Gurus in the Adi-Granth written by Udāsī scholars are an indication of their attempt to show their affiliation to early Sikh tradition. The Udāsīs appeared to be more closer to the main stream than the Minas, Dhirmalias and the Ram Rayias.

The Matra Shastra of Baba Sri Chand holds the key position in the announcements of a novice to the Udāsi fold. They embody entire code of discipline for the followers. In his teachings Baba Sri Chand laid stress on inner-qualities of life, rather than on the outward forms and symbols. The Main emphasis is on development of a keen mind, reason, right consciousness and fearlessness. The followers are advised to rise above every kind of bias, prejudice, ill will and discrimination. He commended the ideal of service to humanity or Sevabhav to all. The Matras of Baba Sri Chand, the Udāsis believed, had same importance as the Japuji of Guru Nanak. Sri Chand and his followers showed complete reverence to the Adi Granth of the Sikhs. Though the Granth Sahib is revered by the Udāsis, their interpretation of the Sikhism is Vedantic. The usage of concepts like cosmos, god, maya, jeev, atma, vikar, pap, punya, dukh, karam, bhakti, guru, bairagi, Udāsi, mukti, avagaman etc., are evidence of Udāsi response to Vedantic impact. The Matras revolve around the basic issues of the traditional convention of the Udāsi Order. This Matra explicitly conveys the philosophic and metaphysical elements of the faith of the Udāsis as well as the gospel of Baba Sri Chand, a commentary explaining the significance of the Guru in the Udāsi system and the basic requirements and the attributes of the Udāsi.

The other writers of the seventeenth century who contributed to the Udāsi literature are Baba Gurditta, Balu Hasna, Meharban, Gurdas Dakhni and Hariya. The Matra’s attributed to Baba Gurditta (the eldest son of Guru Hargobind) is composed to the glory of Guru Nanak, who has been depicted as the supreme lord of the eighty four Naths (Yogis). Balu Hasna composed of Matra on the metaphysics of Baba Sri Chand and the Udāsi code of conduct (Rahet Mariyada). The text of the Matra of Balu Hasna is based on the theory of Avatar Vaad. Mehbarban wrote Sukhmani which is famous amongst the Udasi Sants. The name Sukhmani resembles with the work of Guru Arjan Dev, but the context is different. Baba Gurdas (Dakhni), belonged to Almast Dhuan and wrote Matra shastra. His Matra Shastra throws light on the history of the Udasi sect and on the life of Udasi Saints. Hariya’s only available work is Granth Hariya Ji Ka, which seems to have been written by one of his followers. This huge Granth of 694 pages, organized according to musical Raag Raaginis like the composition arrangement done in the Adi Granth, can be seen at Baluana dera. Much of his work resembles the Bani of The Adi Granth. The year written on his Granth is samvat 1735. Hariya has mentioned Babar and Humayun, in his work which forces us to believe that he was a contemporary of Guru Nanak. His work shows the influence of Punjabi language.

Eighteenth century poets included Sant Rein, Girdhar, Surat Ram, Ishwar Das, Rattan Hari, Anandghan etc. Sant Rein (1741-1871 AD) with his maximum writings dominates the eighteenth century writers. Poet Sant Rein of late eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries, is said to have been born in 1741 and died in 1871 Information about his initiation into Udasi tradition is not known. In his Nanak Vijay Granth which he started writing at Balapur Peeth in Akola district in Madhya Pradesh.

34 Beginning his Matra with Sri Chand, he describes how universe was created. He has given detailed description about the Udasi Guru Tradition (Guru Prampra) and its development. After describing how Sri Chand established four Dhuanas. Baba Gurdas writes that the Udasis should have firm belief in Jata, Bhasam, Chimta, Chippi, Khons, Kharawaan, Bahagya (Gerua or ochre) Vastra. Baba Gurdas writes that Ram Chandra also spent 12 years as an Udasi and Kaushik Muni who gave knowledge (Gyan) to Ram Chandra was also an Udasi. He also wrote Rehat Nama known as Matra Udas Sampardaya in 1698 A.D. Randhir Singh, Udasi Sikhan di Vithiya, pp. 108-110. Also see “Baba Gurdas Matra”, Chopaye 35, 36 as cited in Jagannath Sharma, Udasin Sampardaye Ke Hindi Kavi Aur Unka Sahitya, p. 70-72.

35 His earlier name could be Hari Das Hari Chand or Hari Mal. Hari Das was born in 1720 Smvat i.e. 1663 AD. He was a Jat from Baluana in Bhatinda. See Chander Kant Bali, Punjab Prantiya Hindi, Sahitya Ka Itihas, p.303, as cited in Jagannath Sharma, Udasin Sampardaye Ke Hindi Kavi Aur Unka Sahitya, p. 178.

36 Jagannath Sharma, Udasin Sampardaye Ke Hindi Kavi Aur Unka Sahitya, p. 179.

37 The total period of Sant Rein comes to be 130 years which seems to be doubtful. Regarding the birth and parentage of Sant Rein, Piara Singh Padam has recorded some facts and traditions in his monograph. According to one tradition he was born in Punjab in Sangatpura Village, in Amritsar district. Another view is that he was born at Srinagar in Kashmir. He was born to parents Pandit Harivallabh and Savitri Devi; Piara Singh Padam, Mahatma Sant Rein, Punjabi University, Patiala, 1978, pp. 1-2; Sachidanand Sharma, Udasi Sampardaye aur Kavi Sant Rein, Dehradun, 1967, p. 68; Jagannath Sharma, Udasin Sampardaye Ke Hindi Kavi Aur Unka Sahitya, pp 81-82.

Pradesh and completed it at Bhudan, Malerkotla, Sant Rein claims himself to be a disciple of Baba Sahib Das. The line of succession of Bhudan is (1) Sant Rein (2) Mahant Ram Saran (3) Mahant Madan Gopal (4) Mahant Mukat Ram is the present incumbent. It is said that Sant Rein was 15th Mahant in succession to Sri Chand.

As a poet laureate and a missionary, Sant Rein propagated his mission far and wide through his poetical compositions and also establishing numerous Udasi centres. About two dozen literary compositions are ascribed to Sant Rein by Piara Singh Padam. Sri Mat Nanak Vijay Granth, Man Parbhodh, AnBhai Amrit, Shri Guru Nanak Bodh, Udasi Bodh, Bachan Sangreh, Guru Mehma, Gur Gian Mahatam, Vairag Chhand, Gian Chhand, Guru Sikh Santha Phalroop Bhajan, Dohre Sadh Reet ke, Rajneeti, Kaya Mahatam, Dohre Siddhant ke, Shabad, Kabitt Magan Ras Bhed ke, Rekhte, Jhulne, Majhan, Sadhan De Lakhna Dian Majhan. Siharfian and Guru Sikh Sambad (vartik adi). Among these, the most prominent ones are Nanak Vijay Granth, Man Parbhodh, Nanak Bodh, Udasi Bodh and Siharfian. Out of these, four Siharfian and more than 150 Majhan are all in Punjabi.

As a source of history, the Udasi Bodh contains valuable information on early nineteenth century Udasi as well as the contemporaneous society and culture of the Punjab. Its historical significance also lies in the fact that, Sant Rein, being an Udasi...
Literary figure of eminence was well acquainted with the Udāsī tradition as he himself had witnessed it gaining much popularity and influence under Sikh rule, especially during the reign of Maharaja Ranjit Singh. The textual evidence of the Udasi Bodh, has not been fully tapped by many a scholars of Sikh history and literature. Among those who are known to have either made its partial or full use for varied purposes are Harbhajan Singh, Piara Singh Padam, Sachidanand Sharma, J.S. Grewal and Sulakhan Singh.

There is textual evidence in the Udāsī Bodh that it is the fifth poetic composition of Sant Rein. The other four works written previously include his Man Parbodh, Nanak Vijay, Nanak Bodh and Bachan Sangreh. All these five works can be seen at Sant Rein Ashram, Bhudan Ashram. Udasi Bodh is a Braj work which was completed in 1858. It has thirty two chapters containing 320 folio and 2520 slokas. It is in size 14x12 cms. Each folio contains 12 lines.

From the point of view of its literary and historical value, it seems to be more important than any of his other works. Hence, its value as a source for socio-cultural history of the Punjab in general and the diverse beliefs and practices of the Udāsīs in particular needs to be underlined.

It is very important to note that the works of Sant Rein including his Udāsi Bodh seem to have been much influenced by the sacred literature of both the Hindus and the Sikhs. He was quite well versed in Sankrit and Punjabi languages. The probable sources of his information, therefore, include the Guru Granth Sahib of the Sikhs and the Vedas, the Puranas, the Bhagwad Gita and the Shastras of the Hindus. His compositions also reflect the influence of the sayings and doings of some medieval Indian Sants of known sanctity. There is enough textual evidence to prove that the Udasi Bodh reflects the influence of the four Vedas, the Upanishads and the Bhagwad Gita. At some places, we can also see the influence of the Hindu epics i.e. the Mahabharata and the Ramayana. These sources seem to have considerably influenced the world view, ideology and philosophy of the poet. As the Vedas were not supposed to be the creation of the human beings, their sacred texts were, thus, called the 'Shruti', meaning thereby that they have got divine character and only the Rishis could get them through revelation.55 Reference to the Vedas, the Upanishads and the Shalokas from the Bhagwad Gita are found here and there in the Udasi Bodh.56 Being a staunch exponent of the Vedantic philosophy, Sant Rein often quotes different slokas from the Bhagwad Gita. Even some of them have been quoted almost in verbatim. For instance, Lord Krishna explains to Arjuna that in order to establish the real religious Order on the good earth, he took many rebirths to punish the sinful and to protect the sants.57 As the Bhagwad Gita is the basis of the Vedantic philosophy, hence Sant Rein often quotes from its sacred text. Some references to the Upanishdas are also made58. The Udasi Bodh also reflects the influence of the works of Medieval Sants or the bhagats notably Sant Kabir. Sant Rein, no doubt, had a tenacious memory and probably he often did not have the text of many of his authorities with him. That's why he often uses his memory to cite from the religious texts with which his acquaintance or familiarity can not be ruled out altogether, though the quotations he gives from such sources are not always very exact. However, the Udasi Bodh stands a witness to the inherited influence of Sant Kabir and his works. Apart from the influence of the medieval Poets, Sant Rein also seems to have been influenced by some other poets of eminence such as, to name a few, Rahim or Ras Khan.

Sant Rein had complete reverence for the Sikh Gurus. The Udasi Bodh clearly shows influence of the Adi Granth. He has quoted a few lines from the slokas of the Japuji of Guru Nanak and his Asa Di Var. Also a couplet from his Bani in Rag Tilang is seen quoted by the poet. A few hymns from the Bani of Guru Amar Das, the Anand Sahib, also find mention in the text of the Udasi Bodh. Not only this, Sant Rein also makes a reference to the Vairag Shatkam of Bhartari Hari. On the whole, he extensively inherited thoughts and ideas of the Vedas, the Puranas, the Simaritis, the medieval Poets of the Bhakti movement and the Adi Granth, had certainly reinterpreted them in accordance with his own mental skills and literary acumen. His Udasi Bodh, thus, very largely turns out to be a synthesis of the Vedantic school of the ancient Indian philosophy and the religious thought of the Sikh Gurus enshrined in the Adi Granth.

As regards the purpose of the Udasi Bodh Sant Rein claims its religious and social merit by clearly emphasizing its relevance to his contemporaries. As a missionary of the Udāsī tradition, he has given enough space to the history of its origin and growth in terms of a panth. With a view to this, he emphatically states that Guru Nanak was the founder of Udāsī Panth. In his view, Baba Sri Chand and Baba Gurditta, eldest son of Guru Hargobind, besides the earliest known Udāsīs of the four dhuans, contributed a lot towards the development and expansion of the Udāsī movement.

The main objective of the poet, however, remains to give an adequate expression to the vedantic school of Indian philosophy. In order to come to the terms with the complex and deep rooted ideas and concepts of the Vedantic philosophy, he did follow the style of a dialogue or discourse or the technique of question-answer. If we go by the contents of the religious scriptures of different religions or even if we follow a Hindu classic Bhagwad Gita, we find the same old style of question-answer being used. In the Udasi Bodh, Sri Chand, as a 'Sikh' (disciple) or a novice raises questions or seeks some queries about the philosophy of life from his father Guru Nanak and the latter is, thus, obliged to give answer to all the philosophical issues. This may become clearer from the following lines quoted from the text in the footnote. Moreover, the poet too have been seeking patronage from his contemporary Sikh rulers by way of representing the Udāsī tradition as a tradition of the 'Nanakbans' i.e. the 'Nanakpanthis', the followers of Guru Nanak.

The Udasi Bodh has been divided into thirty two chapters, each containing explanation of some meta-physical ideas and concepts of fundamental importance to man and his purpose of being. The Udasi Bodh begins with Manglacharan or the poet’s prayer invoking God or Parmeshwar Brahm for completion of his work\(^67\). The Granth starts with the Mul-Mantra of the Japuji Sahib and the Manglacharan begins with Ram Binod Chhand (metre). Then, the poet makes prayers to his Guru and we see no difference in the attributes of his Guru and the Parmeshwar or the Almighty One.

It informs us how this Mul Mantra passed from Vishnu to Brahma, then from Brahma to Narad Muni to Rishi Vyasa to Raja Janak and so on to Rishi Vashishat, Rama and Shivji. Shivji passed it to Parvati. On the historical plane, Shri Ramanuj gave this mantra to Ramananda Swami, who gave it to Gorakh Nath. And after that the God ‘Ses Sain Bhagwan’ blessed Guru Nanak with this mantra and from Guru Nanak this mantra continuously passed on to all his successors, the Sikh Gurus. Sri Chand got this mantra from Guru Nanak Dev. It further continued through Baba Gurditta and the early Udāsī of the four dhuans such as Balu Hasna, Alamst, Goina and Phul to many others.

In the Udasi Bodh, Sant Rein has devoted one complete chapter to the history of origin and growth of the Udāsī Panth.\(^68\) He traces spiritual descent of the Udāsī from Sri Chand, who was spiritually enlightened and lived as a celibate throughout his life.\(^69\) Writing in the first half of the Seventeenth century, even Bhai Gurdas had made a reference to the celibacy of Sri Chand, who, in his view, established the dehra (smadh) of his father, Guru Nanak, at Kartarpur, now in Pakistan.\(^70\) However, Sant Rein seeks the divine sanctity of Udāsī tradition by tracing its meta-historical origin from the ‘Onkar’ (God).\(^71\) Not only this, at the same time, he tries to trace the legitimacy of the Udāsī Panth from Guru Nanak and his doctrine of satnam (the only true name of God). In his view, it was the same seed of satnam that sprouted from Guru Nanak and flourished, in the orthodox line of Sikh Gurus as well as Udāsī tradition that continued from Sri Chand to the four Dhuans (smouldering hearths).

He uses the metaphor of a tree for the Udãsî Panth to explain its expansion.\textsuperscript{75} The panth, in his view, had the divine sanction.\textsuperscript{76}

Significantly, Sant Rein refers to Sri Chand and Guru Angad as the two branches of the same tree (Guru Nanak).\textsuperscript{77} Not only this, he explains the growth of Udãsî tradition through Baba Gurditta, eldest son of Guru Hargobind, for whom the Udãsîs had a special reverence. He is of the view that Sankadik (the four sons of Brahma) appeared before Baba Gurditta at Kiratpur.\textsuperscript{78} The latter adopted them as his disciples and renamed them.\textsuperscript{79} They were Almost, Balu Hasna, Goinda and Phul.\textsuperscript{80}

They were heads of the four dhuans, known as adi-Udāsīs who practised nam simran.

It may be noted that in Sant Rein's view, the Udāsī panth further expanded primarily due to their efforts and it grew the same way as the marg of the Vedas and that of the Guru Granth Sahib. Significantly, the term used for the adi-Udāsīs and their followers is 'Nanakban', adherents of Guru Nanak, although they observed distinct bodily symbols and practices and did not believe in casteism.

Sant Rein's attempt to claim the equal veracity of his Udāsī Panth with that of the Panth of Guru Nanak is quite clear from the Udasi Bodh. He makes a reference to the Matra (incantation) of Sri Chand which in his eyes was not less in any way than the spiritual merit of the Japuji of Guru Nanak. Even the other compositions of Sikh liturgy such as the Kirtan Sohila, the Japuji and the Rehras had the same religious merit as is contained in the Arta and the Matra of the Udāsī.

Sant Rein's presentation of the Udāsī Panth in the Udasi Bodh, makes clear that he had emphatically sought its legitimacy with the early Sikh tradition by all means. At the same time, he was very much conscious of the fact that Udāsī tradition was growing almost on parallel lines to the Panth of the Sikh Gurus. By doing all this, he was perhaps not only seeking patronage from his contemporary Sikh classes and landed aristocracy, but also was definitely widening his social base among the people of different strata of society during the late 18th and early 19th centuries.\(^{86}\)

The evidence of the Udasi Bodh is also very helpful to know the views of the Udásís on the nature of God and several other religious and philosophical issues and concepts such as maya, bhakti, mukti, vairag, atman, janan or gyan, karam or the theory of transmigration of the soul, pap, pun, dukh and the five evils i.e. kam, krodh, lobh, moh and ahankar.

The Udasi Bodh clearly reveals that the Udásís believed in the concept of Advait Brahm (non-dualism). To reinforce their belief of Advait Brahm they seek support in the Vedas.\(^{87}\) They used both Hindu and Sikh epithets for God such as Brahm, Satnam, Govind, Gopal, Ram, Krishan, Vishan (Vishnu), Vahiguru, Vasudev, Shiv, Mahadev and Narain.\(^{88}\)

As a source for comprehending the socio-cultural history of early nineteenth century Punjab, the evidence of the Udasi Bodh is very valuable. It contains numerous references to the contemporary social evils and practices. The habits of drinking and meat eating; theft of religious scriptures as well as corn, cotton and fruits; the practices of female infanticide and illicit sexual relations; and the killing of animals frequently find mention in the text. Sant Rein, expresses his concern towards the contemporary social evils and practices and it should, therefore, be taken as the Udásís ’s response to the changing political scene in Punjab as well as the case of their changing attitudes. Hence, the historical value of the Udasi Bodh as a source on the social history of the Punjab needs special attention. He has made very explicit references to the moral and ethical degradation of the age. In this context, the practices of female infanticide,\(^89\) the selling of women\(^90\) and the existence of illicit sexual relations find special mention. The age in which Sant Rein lived and experienced is termed as Riti by scholars of Hindi language and literature. His works reveal not only his literary merit and art of writing rather his wider experiences and understanding of the contemporary socio-religious and political realities.

Sant Rein in Udasi Bodh deplores the prevalence of a number of social evils prevalent during the times of Maharaja Ranjit Singh.\(^91\) His deep observation regarding the social status of women in the society help us to construct the true picture of women of that time. He mentions in detail the existence of female infanticide, where the birth of the girl child was considered a burden on the family and as such was inauspicious. The practice of infanticide had so much aggravated that most of the literary Udāsi works of that time condemn this practice.\(^92\) The reason for the development of such practice can be attributed to fear of Muslim attack and the growth of dowry system which had taken a deep root in the society. This further led to the development of another evil practice of Sati system.

Another social evil which was related to the women was the selling of women\(^93\) in the market as commodity. This evil was the outcome of the continuous war taking place from time to time between Mughals, Sikhs, Afghans etc. The practice of selling a girl also existed among the poor members of the society as they could not afford to upkeep and marry her. The women were taken as war booty and were openly sold in the market. This practice had become quite common to be noticed by Sant Rein and others. He laments and condemns the practice and writes that those who earn money by selling women either in war or to fulfill the economic needs of the family will be awarded hell after death. That is the main reason that the birth of girl child was deplored and she was killed. On the contrary, Sant Rein also imposes certain moral obligations on women which he wants them to observe in the society.

He warns them not to indulge in sexual exploits and as such condemns adultery and illicit\textsuperscript{94} relations. In \textit{Udasi Bodh}, there are frequent references to the prevalence of illegal or illicit sexual relations.\textsuperscript{95} He expects women to bear a good moral character so that she earns respectable status in the society. It was perhaps, a suggestion to improve the deplorable condition of the women. He wants her to be sincere to her husband to whom she is married for life. He wants women to lead a simple and blissful life. He asks them to shun the use of meat and intoxicant drinks and he bequeaths curse on such women to lead a miserable life.\textsuperscript{96} Idealist Sant Rein wishes women to be respectful and sincere to their husband and his family. He laments those women who mistreat and disrespect the parents of her husband,\textsuperscript{97} which spoils the family peace. On the whole, the \textit{Udasi Bodh} carries a long list of preaching and teaching concerning the women. If he condemns the evil practices in the society then on the other hand he throws a lengthy piece of advice for her to improve her status and position in the family and society as a whole.

The main important aspect about women which Sant Rein has dealt in length is the plight of the widows. He depicts the poor plight of the widow in the society. The widows were debarred from using cosmetics to beautify her. As she could not remarry the only way left for her was to surrender herself to God. This further proves the point that Sati was not common in Punjab, but it brings to another social evil prevalent in the society that widow remarriage was not allowed. This was the major curse to the womanhood who became widow at the early age. As such their life was made miserable by the social norms and she was deprived of all the luxuries of clothes and ornaments and even of spicy food. She had to lead a life of an ascetic.

The position of the widow in the society has still not undergone much change. She is considered a bad omen and is made responsible for the death of her husband. One thing which brings to our notice is that all the Udāsī poets have talked about widow’s plight. It proves that in Punjab the practice of sati was not in vogue among the common people. Sant Rein being an ascetic also acted as a great moralist by showing mirror to the society where a woman was ill-treated. The sole purpose behind this was an appeal for the upliftment of the moral standard of the society. He also curses the masterminds behind these atrocities inflicted upon women. The purpose of bestowing curse on such men was to create fear in their mind and to resist them from mistreating women. It has been mostly seen that men are more afraid of religious punishments and curse than the course of law. On the whole Sant Rein observed that generally a woman was illtreated. In his eyes a person subjecting a woman to atrocities of any kind was to remain cursedly a widower for not less than three of his rebirths. How far his curse had been helpful to improve the condition of the women cannot be confirmed but his genuine intentions cannot be detested.

Among the other equally contemptible acts in the society of his times was the killing of animals and eating and selling of meat. He not only condemned those who took to meat eating but also asked the meat sellers to change the occupation. He writes that he does not want to have any kind of social contact and religious discourse with such people who indulge in meat eating or selling. He was against the slaughter of animals. He curses that such people one day will be punished by the Dharam Raj on the last Day of Judgment.

The elaborate institution known as caste system among the Hindus in India may almost be said to be without a parallel in the world, although there is hardly a country where classes or order of society or grades of social distinction of some kind or other are not met with. Megasthnesne when came to India in 305 B.C., also mentions the existence of seven castes on the basis of occupation. Alberuni, who visited India in seventh century, too mentioned existence of caste system.

Thus, caste system had been prevalent since ancient times and its roots were deep rooted in Indian social system. Guru Gobind Singh, the tenth Guru of the Sikhs tried to do away with the system by proposing the usage of Singh and Kaur, for men and women respectively and ignoring caste. Caste System still continues and the curse of the system was felt and condemned in the Udāsi literature by the poets of the times. Sant Rein does not believe in caste distinction and hates those who practise the same and discriminate people on the basis of birth. The major draw back of the caste system was that it ignored the quality in man and promoted those who belonged to the higher class and caste.

It is quite paradoxical that Sant Rein on one hand condemns caste system and holds all equal before God but on the contrary, he talks of bestowing respect and honour for the Brahmins\(^{109}\). Perhaps, the poet was favouring the Brahmins for their religious obligations which should not be calculated on caste basis. He wants the society to pay charity\(^{110}\) and respect to the Brahmins as they preach and recite the religious scriptures.\(^{111}\) They believed that Guru Nanak also favoured the idea of charity as a way to salvation.\(^{112}\) They themselves practiced begging, and therefore, favoured the cause of beggers.\(^{113}\) Moreover, the Brahmins also acted as teachers for the students. Similarly, he wants the society to pay equal status to the Harijans or the people of low caste. He wanted to do away with prevailing system of untouchability. This was the major social evil prevalent in the society as a whole and it needed utmost condemnation. Udāsi poets did it at the right opportune moment and tried to preach the lesson of fraternity. He not only condemned caste system and casteindiscrimination but also those who were infested with caste pride. Sant Rein condemned stealing of religious scriptures, corn, cotton and fruit. These references of Sant Rein present a clear cut picture of the prevalence of un-touchability and rigidity of society in the early 19th century. He also condemns the usage of harsh words for religious persons, killing of a Brahmin and breaking idols of Shiva and Vishnu.

writing but it appears to have been written after Man Parbodh, probably between 1892 to 1912 Shamsher Singh Ashok considers 1848-1858 to be the composing period of Nanak Vijay Granth. Nanak Vijay Granth, written towards the end of Sikh rule, shows the Udāsi ’s view of Guru Nanak. The poet praises the greatness of Guru Nanak, who very humbly passed gaddi to Guru Angad Dev. Sant Rein considers Guru Nanak as Param Guru and is thankful to him because he made Udāsi Panth superior to all other existing panths. Whether Hindu or Musalman, all appreciate the greatness of Guru Nanak who spread the message of truth and even the Udāsi Sants consider him as Isht.

Nanak Vijay is available at three places i.e. Balapurpeeth District Akola, Madhya Pradesh; second at Sadhu Bela Ashram Sakkhar, Sindh; and the third (in 1981) could be seen with Mahant Chand Swroop of village Lehalkalan, District Sangrur. The original copy of Guru Nanak Vijay, is maintained at Sadhu Sant Rein Ashram, Bhudan Malerkotla. The other three are its copies only. It contains 1860 pages and size 30×18 square centimeter. Each page contains 24 lines and each line 19 to 20 words. It has 20 Khand, 347 chapters and 24,382 Chhand. Sant Rein’s Man Prabodh is a small book of 166 chhands all addressed to Man (mind). The main stress is to divert attention of mind from worldly pursuits to Brahmm and this is the first work of Sant Rein and probably written in samvat 1891-92.

i.e 1834-1835 AD. It has been published and has fifty six pages. Harbhajan Singh, a well known scholar of Punjabi and Hindi literature, clearly upholds this fact while making comments on the language of Sant Rein's another work i.e. 'Man Parbodh. He has very well stated that Sant Rein used Braj with a mixture of khari language. He used only that type of Braj which was very likely to be well understood and used by the common people at that time. Not only that his language is simple and transparent, but also he has not tried at all to embellish his style with word jugglery or in sentence formation. This type of language not only most suited to his audience and common people, but also to his personality and poetic genius. The language of the Udasi Bodh, clearly reflects the influence of Sankrit language and its vocabulary. The different meters of poetry (Indian Prosody called Pingal) are also found used at different places in the text. Even, as it has been said earlier, some slokas from the Bhagwad Gita and the Adi Granth too have been used in their original form in the manuscript of Udasi Bodh.

Another important work of Sant Rein is Amritsagar or Bachhan Sangreh. The book of 144 pages has also been published. It was probably written in samvat 1914-15 i.e 1857- 1858 AD. Its main subject matter being Vedant, the work is in question answer form where disciple asks the questions and Guru clarifies his doubts giving solution through examples. So, the work focuses on relation between Guru and disciple. It has 14 chapters, 144 pages and 723 chhands.

During the period of Sant Rein, the society was facing political upheaval. His writings too express the chaotic conditions of those times. He condemned administration at many places, and also the society indulging in wrong deeds. He was against fast, Jagran and Hathyog. He was in favour of solemnizing marriage within the caste. He was influenced by magic, charm, and superstition of those times. For a successful journey he believed good omen was very important. He considere money and property as cause of suffering. He believed in poverty but does not consider poverty as the main cause of sorrow. The causes of suffering according to him are desires. His writings also express the influence of capitalism of the times. He considers Lajja as an ornament of India woman.

Before the development of Khari, most of the Hindi poets used ‘Braj’ Bhasha. The Chandi Charit of Guru Gobind Singh is the best example. Sant Rein had complete command over ‘Braj’ Bhasha along with Khari Boli. He also knew ‘Sankrit’. Sparingly he has also used ‘Arabic and Persian’ words. Jagannath Sharma considers that the language used by Sant Rein, is neither purely Braj, Punjabi or Khari. At one place, he considers Sankrit as a difficult language for the people to understand and he used simple language to express his views. So Jagannath Sharma considers Sant Rein’s language as Khari with a mixture of Braj, Punjabi, Sankrit and a few words of Arabic and Persian language.\textsuperscript{128}

Regarding his parentage, his name and date of birth, there are many controversies. It appears he was a Bhatt by Caste. Bhai Kahan Singh believes that his earlier name was Hari Das and he belonged to Punjab and Vishvdas Usadi was his Guru. The nineteenth and twentieth century works include the writings of Bidhi Das, Kanwal Das, Ganga Das, Parmanand, Amir Das, Hirinam Das, Karshne poets, Shardha Ram, Bishan Das, Sommuni, Krishan Das Swami Brahmanad, Gulab Das, Govind Ram etc. Their work is mostly in Hindi, Punjabi and Sankrit. The emphasis of some of the writers was mainly on British mal-administration, rotten judicial system and prevalent corruption. Besides this, some writers laid stress on social and moral values and encouraged their followers to follow the right path as shown by the Udãsîs. Some depicted the plight of the woman and some raised fingers on their loose character, and advised them to live a simple life. Their writings expose their insularity towards woman as they severely criticize them and consider them responsible for the social evils. Their writings portrayed the deteriorating social customs and rituals. The twentieth saw many women writers contributing through their compositions to the Udãsî literature such as, Laxmibai, Suvachna Dasi, Vijay Kaur and Shrimati Rattan Faujdar. The century also included writers like Brahmanand Udasin and Randhir Singh who had immensely contributed to the Udãsî history, its establishments and their fight against the Akalis.

Bidhi Das, a nineteenth century poet wrote Bhagat Sudhasar, which is available in Sikh Reference Library at Golden Temple. This Granth carries nine chapters which mention 171 Bhagats belonging to Vaishnav Samprada. In the end of this Granth, he mentions Guru Nanak Dev and has equated him with Brahma, Vishnu, Mahesh and considers Guru Nanak as an Avtar of Raja Janak.\(^\text{141}\) Kanwal Das Nirban \(^{141}\) Its composition period is said to be between 1817-1829 A.D. The reprint year on it is 1862 A.D. which means 33 years after its composition. Bidhi Das Udasi, “Bhagat Sudhasar”, Sikh Reference library, MS Golden Temple, Amritsar, p. 42, as cited in Sri Guru Nanak Abhinandan, p.121, 122.

(Composition 1821) wrote Guru Saakhi Brahm Bichar Mahatam Dhyan (Manuscript 1821). He has praised Guru Nanak as the emancipator who has spread the idea of brotherhood, dedication, Gyan and Bhagti in this world.¹⁴² Ganga Das wrote *Mahabharat padavali.*¹⁴³ He wrote about fifty books out of which only forty five are available. His writings include Puran Bhagat, Narsi Bhagat Dhruv Bhagat, Nirgun Padhavali, Krishna Janam, Shravan Kumar, Nal Puran, Ram Katha, Nagleela, Sudama Charit, Mahabharat Padhavali, Bali ke Pad, Rudramani Mangal, Prahlad Bhagat, Chandr Vati Nasiket, Parvati Mangal, Bhramar Geet Manjari, Kundalian, Pad Harishchander, Nirgun Laavani and Barah Khari. All these works are hand written works of Ganga Das.¹⁴⁴

His writings depict the picture of a conservative society where most of the daily routine works were bound by lucky, unlucky days, good and bad omen magic and charms, people wether rich or poor, all were in the tight grip of faith on Pandits and Ojhas.¹⁴⁵ There was a great demand for amulets as it was thought to keep the evil spell away.¹⁴⁶ A girl was married at three or four years of age and boy at six to eight years.¹⁴⁷ Ganga Das considered seven years girl to be fit for marriage.¹⁴⁸ According to Ganga Das, marriage during those days was a costly affair. He gives description of marriage ceremony which involved dowry system.¹⁴⁹ He writes that at the advent of the British, ‘Kuru’ Pradesh society was full of these evils and he compares this society with a stagnant and stinking pond. For such a rotten society he holds British Administration responsible and condemns British administration as corrupt, and unethical. The Judiciary and judicial system had gone corrupt like the administrators who believed more in bribe than in work. The criticism of Ganga Das about the social set up of the time stitches a complete picture of corrupt and inefficient administrative set up of that time. He also holds religious Sants responsible for the down trodden society. He has used Braj Bhasha, Khari Boli, few words of Arabic, Persian and Bhojpuri in his works.

Paramanand Udasin’s composition Japuji Sahib Sri Paramanandi Tika (1872 A.D.) was published third time from Nawal Kishore Press, Lucknow in Devnagri. Amir Das was a famous poet and his work finds mention in Bharatendu Harish Chandra’s Bhagat Mala. His other works are: Krishansahitya Sindhu, 1833, Vaidh Kalpatru Pingal Vrit Chandrudyaye, Brij Raj Vilas Satsai, 1840, Sher Singh Prakash, 1840, Amir Prakash, 1859 and Ashav Sahinta Prakash, 1862. His works show influence of Punjabi and Braj Bhasha. He has used both art and expression in his work. Advaitanand Brahama wrote Narendra Nitishatak, Narendra Bhanu Prakash, Narendra Vibhavvilas, Akaal Vilas and Guru Gobind Singh Digvijay. The first three works are dedicated to Maharaja Narendra Singh of Patiala. He has praised Guru Gobind Singh in his last work. His writings belong to the period from 1851 to 1918. Swami Harinam Das’s work Vinay Patrika written in Gurumukhi is available in Haridwar library, with the name of author as 108, Swami Harinam Das Udasin. It was published by Ramesh Chander Suri of Kapurthala, from Mahesh Printing Press, Jalandhar. The publication date is not available.

Karshney Poet’s poets were worshippers of Lord Krishna known as Krishna Upasak. Their poems are related, directly or indirectly to the Krishna Mahima and Bhakti. Gopal Das poetry was attributed to Lord Krishna. His work depicts his immense love for lord Krishna and as such he was called Karshne by his Guru, the name struck to his identity and soon a branch of such poets followed. It shows that Udāsī poets were not limited to Sikh Gurus only but had liking for Hindu deities as well. The only difference noticeable among the Karishne poets and other Udāsī Poets was that former worship Krishna besides following other attributes of Udāṣīs, while latter stuck to the Udāsī cult.

Karishne poet was Gopal Das born at Haripur Hazara, in Pakistan in Bagra village, to parents Jawahar Mal and Chandan Devi, in 1862 A.D. His earlier name was Bhagwan Das. He was initiated to Udāsī sect in 1883. He was married to Parvati daughter of Jai Ram of Mansera and was blessed with two sons: Paramanand and Hukamchand. Paramanad had no issue while Hukamchand had three daughters. Presently, they are living at Delhi.

He got baptized into Udāsī sect, by Gian Das Udasin in 1883 and from Bhagwan Das he became Gopal Das.157 He died in 1922 at Mathura. Eighteen published works of Gopal Das are available, eleven in Hindi and seven in Sankrit. His Hindi works are: Playgashtak 1925, Karshne Karnabharn and Brajvasolaas, 1852, Shri Gopal Vilas, 1952, Sneh Patr Ramayan, 1957, Puran Vilas and Gopi Chand vinod, 1966, Shamsagai and Hari Ashik Panth, Prabodh Chandruday Natak, Shri Krishan Krira Ka Saar, Karshni Vinay, Sadhu Sihopanyas, Karshni Kirtnam, and his Sankrit works are: Bhakti Prakash, 1915; Avtar Mimansa, 1923; Susadhuta Sudha Sindhu, 1924; Shri Krishan Arpan Prarthana, 1954; Karshni Kanthabharnam, 1961; Karshni Ka Vachan or Karshni Kiritam 1962, Viragya Bhaskar (n.d).158 Out of these ‘Gopal Vilas’ is the most important. It is written in Braj and it describes all important events associated with the life of Krishna.

The importance of Karishne literature is that it sheds light on the thought process of Karishne poets towards the society. They believed in the existence of Brahm and Atma. The work of Gopal Das, Gopal Vilas is held in great esteem by the people. Like Ramcharit Manas, they consider it a of great importance and is recited by Karishne followers. The works of Karishne poets was greatly influenced by Bhakti movement, Nath Panthis, and the Sufis. Their works depict the picture of society, its customs, traditions and practices along with the polity of that time. Like other Udâsi Sants, the writings of Karishne Poets describe the pitiable condition of society.

Like Sant Rein and Kavi Ganga Das the writings of Karishne poets present, a poor picture of the women of those times. In their view a woman should not be trusted as she could go to an extent of killing her children and even husband and above all could pretend to be, in grief, over their death. They are not pure at heart. But this view about women does not seem to be correct. It was nothing new such kind of opinion against women existed since past ages and portrayed male chauvinism. Man had always portrayed women as a commodity and has put all blames on her for his misfortunes. Karishne Poets have also given description about different kinds of make-up used by women and explains many types of ornaments tikka, bindi, lip colour, alkyl (kajal), rings, earrings and earstuds, bangles, necklace, nose studs and anklets etc. Their writings also give us the picture of British administrators who had adopted the policy of discrimination against the Indians. They have criticized their administration as it failed to look after the public interest. They emphasised on truthfulness and were of the opinion that it always triumphed.

A commentary or Tika on Sant Gulab Singh’s Prabodh Chandra Natak is written by Sant Jwala Das. His work was published from Amritsar in 1867 A.D. He refers to Guru Gobind Singh as a protector of Hinduism.

There have been three Sant Rein: First sant Rein was Mahant of that Sadhu Mandli on whom Guru Nanak spent the amount given by his father for a business, episode known as Saccha Sauda. Second Sant Rein was from Bhudan Udâsi Dera, writer of Nanak Vijay and the third was, Baba Prem Singh Sant Rein, composer of Gurpur Prakash. Baba Prem Singh’s composition Gurpur prakash is in four volumes and it has beautifully described Guru Nanak’s life in 328 pages.

Guru Nanak's face is glowing and fresh like lotus. Hindu’s and Muslim’s all are his followers.

Guru Nanak is a light of hope for all those who flock around him as the Sewak is happy for his Isht same way Nanak followers except him as Pati Parmeshwar.

He writes that in order to put an end to the evils, put away the feeling of pride and to teach the lesson of Such Nam Guru Nanak has come to this world.
Bawa Ram Das’s famous unpublished work Bani Ram Das was influenced by Braj and Punjabi. His another work Pratar Prakash Granth was published in 1891, due to the efforts of Maharaja Narender Singh of Patiala with whom he had cordial relations. His other works are Vird Pratap 1802. He had immensely praised Guru Nanak in his compositions.

His composition period according Jagannath Sharma is considered to be from 1880-1920 AD, but Chander Kant Bali and Davinder Singh Vidyarthi considers his composition period to be 1823 and 1821 respectively. Shiv Singh, Shiv Singh Saroj; Lucknow, 1883 A.D., p.151-505 as cited in Davinder Singh Vidyarthi, Guru Gobind Singh Abhinandan, Guru Nanak Dev University Amritsar, 1993, p. 142; Davinder Singh Vidyarthi, Guru Nanak Abhinandan, p.148; Also see, Shobha Prashar, Udasi Sampardaye ka Hindi Sahitya, p. 144. His reference is also found in Shiv Singh Saroj.

Ram Das writes that his heart becomes joyous on the very thought of explaining the meaning of Nanak. Nanak is the real name of forgiveness.

The poet Ram Das explains that Guru gave equality and honour to the poor. He is merciful to everybody who needs him. Whoever takes shelter in Nanak named ship, gets emancipated. Who Pandit Mohan Lal, Antarjami Udasi, and Kushal Das were other poets of this period. Kushal Das’s composition Guru Nanak Satotar showed influence of Braj, Punjabi and Khari.

destroyes the darkness of ignorance and leads towards enlightenment, who fulfills every desire is Nanak.

He was follower of Ganga Das and was born in Meerut around 1850 A.D. at Paanchi Village. His period of composition is considered to be between 1850 to 1930 A.D. He has eight Books to his credit, of which only two are available Bhajan Sia Savayambar and Nirgum Pad. Bhajan Sia was published by Jawahar Book Depot, Gujari Bazar, Meerut but date of publication is not available and the language is Puru, Khari Boli. It consists of 32 pages. It appears that, it was published after 1934 A.D. The other work Nirgam Pad, is hand written work, in shape of a small booklet of 7”×9” (seven inches by nine inches), year not known. It carries signature of Pritam Dutt Sharma at the end. Jagannath Sharma, Udasin Samparda Ke Hindi Kavi Aur Unka Sahitya, pp. 191-192.

In Sakh Prakash manuscript, word ‘Udasi’ is used along with Antarjami. On the basis of manuscript, Antarjami is assigned period of early nineteenth century. His available compositions are Jeev Prakash, Guru Sikh Samvaad, Antarjami, Sakh Prakash and Aatam Prakash. Gobind Nath Raj Guru, “Udasi Sampardai di Puratan Punjabi Vartak nu Den”, Khoj Patrika Puratan Vartak Vishesh Ank, (ed.). Very few prose compositions or prose works by Udasi Sants have been available but compositions of Anadghan and Antarjami have special place in Punjabi prose.

Rattan Singh Jaggi, Publication Bureau Patiala, 1997, pp. 363, 364; his Guru’s name was Sri Brahm Krishan. He had following in the areas of Fazilka, Bangla and Choonia etc. It is said that he composed Guru Nanak Satotar on request of Punnu Ram who was his follower and a great devotee of Guru Nanak. He doesn’t give any reference to the year of composition. Apart from Keshwa Nand he had another follower Kishnanand. On this account, his period can be considered mid 19th century. "Kushal Das", Sri Guru Nanak Abhinandan, pp. 309-329.

The women writers of this period were Suvachana Dassi, Vijay Kaur, Laxmi Bai, Srimati Rattan Faujdar etc. Suvachna Dassi was born in village Dehma, District Gazipur, Uttar Pradesh in 1871 AD. It is also said the tree under which she used to worship was known as Sach Di Ber till 1947. Vijay Kaur was born in about 1880 A.D. at Meerut. She was a follower of Maha Kavi Ganga Das. Her name Vijay Kaur or Jiya Kaur is held in high esteem amongst the \textit{Udāsīs}.\textsuperscript{172} She belonged to village Bhattipura, in Meerut. She was married to a twenty seven years old, Chandhary Lal of village Khanpur, in Meerut in 1951 \textit{Samvat} ie. 1894 AD. After, she became widow, she came in contact with Mahatma Ganga Das and joined his sect who named her Vijay Kaur.\textsuperscript{173} After Sant Ganga Das’s death in 1913 A.D, his composition \textit{Mahabharat} was published in 1920 A.D. and it was due to the efforts of Vijay Kaur. One copy of this composition is kept at Ganga Das Hindi Sansthan, 3364- Ramnagar, Delhi 110032. No independent published work of Vijay Kaur is available but in the writings of Ganga Das, at many places, her commentaries can be seen, which shows her devotion to her Guru and river Ganga.\textsuperscript{174}

Laxmi Bai belonged to Bedi caste. In her writings, she has used her name as Bibi Lacchi. In her work \textit{Lakshmi Hulas Sagar} she has claimed that she was the fifteenth descendant of Guru Nanak’s dynasty.\textsuperscript{175} She was born at Nanak Chak, post office Fatehgarh, Tehsil Batala, in District Gurdaspur in Punjab.\textsuperscript{176} She completed her work \textit{Lakshmi Hulas Sagar} in 1972 \textit{Samvat}, i.e 1915 AD.\textsuperscript{177} Though she has written many granths such as: \textit{Shri Chandra Prakash, Laxmi Hulas Sagar, Sandeh Aagreh}

Shri Mati Rattan Faujdar was born in 1909 A.D. She was intermediate qualified. Her poetic compositions about forty in number are hand written. Her published poetic compositions are: Gangadhara, Prem Rattan, Acharya Sri Chandr and Yogeshar Guru Gangeswuar and Guru Stuti Rattan.

The other Udāsī writers were Sharda Ram, Bishan Das, Soham Muni Falahari, Karshne Krishan Das, Swami Brahmanand, Govind Ram, Gurdas Udasi, Des Raj, Nigmanand paramhans, Pritam Das Nirban, Jwala Prakash, Harichander Das, Sachidanand, Gian Das, Surjan Das etc.

As regards, the Udāsī contribution to the religion and philosophy of the times, we find that some of the Udāsī Mahants were well known as scholars of Sankrit and expounders of the Vedantic philosophy. Ganesh Das, found Bhai Makhan Singh, an Udāsī Fakir, well known for his knowledge of God and well versed in the Shastras and medicine. In the absence of direct control and direction by the State, indigenous education in the Punjab during the late 18th and 19th centuries was given in the socio-religious institutions of the various groups including the Udāsī. Important Sikh religious centres known as dharamsalas, Gurdwaras or the darbars were under the control and management of the Udāsī Mahants. In the mid of 19th century, a British administrator G.W.Lietner, observed “there was not a mosque a or multiplication tables and certain works on science and morals\textsuperscript{196}. Occasionally instruction was given in \textit{Lande}, Urdu, Persian or Arabic. Bhai Amar Das \textit{Udãsî} was well known for teaching Urdu, Persian and Arithmetic to about nine students at his \textit{Dharmsala} in Jhelum District\textsuperscript{197}. The contribution of the \textit{Udãsî Mahants} to learning traditions of Indian Culture in general and the Punjabi society in particular should not be under estimated. By giving instructions gratuitously in their centres, they partly contributed in preserving the tradition of indigenous education though it faded gradually as a result of the new English education system\textsuperscript{198}.

Regarding public activity of the \textit{Udãsî}, it would be worthwhile to refer to some of the major \textit{Udãsî} institution with which were attached the \textit{baolis}, tanks, \textit{katcha} and \textit{pucca} wells and ponds\textsuperscript{199}. About half a dozen \textit{akharas} and the \textit{dharmsalas}, were well known for running \textit{langar}. It was a regular feature of almost all the major \textit{Udãsî} institutions found scattered over in the districts of Amritsar, Lahore, Shahpur, Jhang, Sialkot, Montgomery and Ludhiana. The number of inmates being fed clothed, towards the end of Sikh rule, in Akhara Santokh Das and dera Bhai Pheru was about 300 and 200 respectively, In the majority of the institutions their number ranged between ten to twenty five\textsuperscript{200}. The Annual expenditure on the daily food of the resident sadhs of the dera of Bhai Pirthi in Lahore, amounted to about Rs.1800\textsuperscript{201}. \textit{Mahant} Gursharan Das of the institution at Heran in Ludhiana distributed about 8000 maunds of grain to the public during the famine of 1862 in Punjab\textsuperscript{202}.

During the Gurdwara Reform Movement the scene was much changed. Many \textit{Udãsî} and Non-\textit{Udãsî} compositions were written. Pandit Brahma Nand Udasin wrote \textit{Guru Udãsî n Mat Darpan}, Randir Singh wrote \textit{Udãsî Sikhan Di Vithiya} and Shiv Ram Udasin also wrote Udāśī an da Sacha Ithas. All these works were written with sectarian and communal bias and are highly polemical.

In the early twenties of the 19th century, a European traveller, William Moorcroft visited an Udāśī institution at Kartarpur, Jalandhar, where he was hospitably received203. Amritsar and Sialkot institutions provided special accommodation to a large number of people on the eve of Diwali and Baisakhi festivals204.

The Udāśī literature spread to nearly three centuries portrayed the different aspects of the Udāśī ideology, its history, polity, religion, culture, and society. The earliest writers were more concerned with establishments of rules and regulation, beliefs and practices, required for the foundation and consolidation of their cult, which their works explicitly exhibited. The following century writers were more concerned about the custom, traditions, and formulating principles to be followed by the disciples so that a particular shape and constitution could be provided to it. The writers of the nineteenth century were disturbed by the establishment of the colonial rule and their writing clearly showed their hatredness for them. The twentieth century writers seemed to have been influenced by the growing national movement in the country. Their work, one way or the other relates to the up-liftment and enlightenment of the society as a whole. The Udāśīs exerted a profound effect on Indian society, when the Hindu masses were suffering because of ignorance and rigidity of cast distinctions. The philosophy preached by Udāśīs inspired them. In their writings they condemn those Sadhus and Sants who practiced false rituals and adopted superficial means to attract and mislead the innocent people by displaying false customs and rituals. Nigmanand Paramhans in his writings criticized those Sadhus who smeared ash on their body, and sat idle on the banks of river Ganga. Their main purpose was to seek public attention. Parmanand condemned such practices. Even a cursory look shows that the Udāśī Sants were not averse to the society and family system. Though they lived as ascetic but never preached this to the people.

Many poets were influenced by the spirit of Nationalism. In this regards names of Ganga Das, Brahmanand and Swami Nigmanand are worth mentioning.

Ganga Das openly criticized British administration and Nigmanad condemned actions of those men who diminish the feelings of Nationalism in society. The feeling of National consciousness social upliftment and desire to uplift the village society could be seen in the writings of Sri Chandra in 16th century.

These Udâsî poets were well versed in the art of sketching a vivid picture of nature. Nigmanand had beautifully described nature in his composition. Sant literature mentions various seasons and their impact on a common man and on the mind of a lover. Ganga Das had portrayed the picture of a lover in separation and beautifully describes his sufferings in his poetical exposition.

Some of the Udâsî poets were considerate towards women while some condemn them. Leaving aside a few Padas of Brahmanand and Gopal Das, generally the other Udâsî poets had presented her as beautiful, kind, and pious. Ganga Das considered the existence of woman important for the society. Many Udâsî poets ignored ‘Shingar Ras’ which magnified the beauty of women.

Veer-ras was very well defined in the writings of Sant Rein, Ganga Das and Nigmanand. In Bairagi Veer Nigmanand has liberally used Veer Ras to describe the chivalry of Bairagi Veer. Ganga Das and Karshne poet, Kavi Gopal Das have explained four aspects of Veer Ras i.e. bravery in war (Yudh veerta), charity (Daan veerta), Religion (Dharm Veerta) and piety (Daya Veerta).

Regarding Adbhut Ras, Sant literature expressed love through imaginative stories, repudiating miracles. Krodh Bhav (anger) and Karun Ras (mourning/shok) were rarely seen in their writings. Hasya (laughter) and Bhayanak (terrible) Ras were also missing in their work. The writings of the Udâsî poets were full of Bhakti Ras, and Bhakti Bhav or praise of God and nature.

Sant Rein and Ganga Das explicitly solicit their followers to articulate themselves in common dialect. Different writers wrote the Udâsî literature from different places and as such its script had multiple dimensions: Ganga Das wrote in Kuru Pradesh; Sant Rein, Lakshmi Bai and Das Raj wrote in Punjab; Gopal Das and other Karihine poets wrote from Mathura; Swami Brahmanand at Bundelkhand; Rattan Faujdar at Bombay and Swami Sharda Ram at Poona. As a result we come across the use of multilingual script, in the writings of Sant literature, such as Sankrit, Punjabi, Hindi, Gujrati, Braj, Haryanvi, Bhojpuri etc. Laxmi Bai, Desh Raj Sachhidanand, Amir Das, Ishwar Das, Hariya Ji and Sant Rein’s writing is dominated by Punjabi language. The Punjabi poets i.e Jwala Prakash and Soham Muni Falahari wrote from Rajasthan. As such their writings bear the dominance of Punjabi words. Baba Sri Chand, Gurdas and Kashi Ram used Khari Boli. The use of Khari in Hindi was in existence before the writing of Bhartendu. The first Udasi Sant to use Khari was Shri Chand, followed by Ganga Das. Bharatendu made use of Khari Boli in 1881 A.D.

In the political sphere the contribution of the Udasi poets is appreciable. Through their writings they inculcated the feeling of patriotism among the people. Many of them openly condemned British Administration for its corrupt and misrule through their literary works. They had emphasized that in ancient times the relation between the ruler and the ruled used to be of like father and son, which was missing during British rule. Their writings, presents the political picture of the times which give us much scope to study and understand the British administrative structure. They made public aware of their rights and on the other hand, in their writings they made the administration aware of their responsibilities towards the people, an uphill and daring task in those days. Many writers like Brahmanand had condemned the British Government for their misrule. Some Udasi Sants even went to jail and participated in the freedom movement of the country. Brahmanand was perhaps the only Udasi Sant who had participated in the India’s freedom struggle along with Mahatma Gandhi. He led a simple life and was always ready to help others, protect mother-land and ready to sacrifice himself for the country. There were very few Sants who were inspired and influenced by patriotic feelings.

In the religious sphere their contribution is immense. They practice their faith through a network of disciplined organizations. They not only carried forward the message of Baba Sri Chand and other Udasi Sants but also tried to spread the Udasi sect far and wide within and outside the country. The numerous Udasi establishments including akharas, dharamalas, deras, samadhs, asthans, gurdwaras and temples shows the extent of intense zeal and sincerity, the Udasi sadhs have, to carry on their movement to the farthest corner of the earth they can.

In the social sphere the Udasi poets pointed out draw backs of the existing social customs and practices in the society of that time which was full of evils. This goes to the credit of the Udasi Sants that they in their writings have openly condemned caste system, false rituals, beliefs, practices, animal killing, the gap existing between rich and poor, and the illiteracy through their literary works. The study of the above writers brings to our notice the existence of the social evils such as adultery, female infanticide, selling of women, illicit relations and depicting the plight of the women in the society. The eating habits had degenerated and meat eating and intoxicating drinks were condemned by the Udāsī poets. They loathed slaughter of animals, theft of religious scriptures, corn, cotton, fruits, corruption of the Pandits and idol worship. The caste system in the society had degenerated and the dominance of corrupt Brahmins was condemned and on the contrary the just and righteous Brahmins were praised and revered by the poets. The idol worship had become a common practice and worship of unlimited deities was observed ignoring the importance in the unity of God head. The Udāsī poets condemned caste system, caste pride, and disrespect shown to the Guru. Now the question is did they only criticize the social structure of that time or did they do any purposeful work to improve the society. The Udāsī Sants through their religious discourses not only condemned these evil practices but also tried to reform the society. They did many social works for the betterment of the society and such works like imparting of education in pathshalas, giving stipends to the poor students, giving food and shelter to the travelers and visitors, helping the people during natural calamities like flood and earth quake, managing dispensaries and distributing free medicine, to the poor still continues. One thing is to be kept in mind that all Mahants were not vocal to the existing social customs and traditions, but many did preach and practiced and tried to uplift the society.

The major contributions of the Udāsī poets especially in the field of social evils need special consideration. Sant Rein’s work, Udāsī Bodh is perhaps the earliest Udāsī work that deals with the social evils of his times. The society of the times was engulfed in many social evils, false beliefs, rituals, caste system and by the dominance of superfluos religious practices. The worship of unlimited deities had made religion expensive and beyond the reach of the common man. The female infanticide, adultery, selling of women and plight of widow had tainted the women’s status in the society. The preachers of the religious literature were distorting the scripture for their personal gains. As a source for the contemporary socio-cultural history of the early nineteenth century Punjab, the Udāsī literature throws considerable light on the existing social customs and evil practices of the times. The eating habits had degenerated and meat eating and intoxicating drinks were condemned by the Udāsī poets. They loathed the slaughter of animals, theft of religious scriptures, corn, cotton, fruits, corruption of the Pandits and idol worship. The caste system in the society had degenerated and the dominance of corrupt Brahmins was condemned, on the other hand, the just and righteous Brahmins were praised and revered by the poets. The idol worship had become a common practice and worship of unlimited deities was observed which ignored the importance of the unity of God.
CHAPTER - VII

THE GURDWARA REFORM MOVEMENT AND THE UDĀŚĪ MAHANTS

The Gurudwaras\(^1\) and Dharamsalas have played a vital role in shaping the history of the Sikhs and the development of the Sikh religious tradition. The Guru, the Granth and the Gurdwara, these religious structures have traditionally been the centres of the religious, social, cultural and political life of the Sikhs.\(^2\) Guru Nanak established the institution of the Sangat and the Pangat. Wherever he went, he left behind a Sangat with an injunction to build Dharamsala\(^3\) with the purpose of meeting in a common forum.\(^4\) The institution of the Sangat\(^5\) and the Pangat continued under the successors of Guru Nanak. The Masands and the Sangats became the central organisation of the Sikhs for the propagation work and collection of funds. By the time of Guru Gobind Singh’s period the Masands developed into disruptive force and hence he abolished the institution of the Masands.

After the execution of Banda Bahadur in 1716, till the rise of the Misaldars, a period of terror and persecution followed by the orders of Emperor Bahadur Shah and Farrukhsiar, and their Punjab Governors Abdus Samad Khan, Zakariya Khan and Mir Mannu. The Sikhs also suffered during the Ahmad Shah Abdali’s invasions from 1748 to 1767. The result was that when a large number of Sikhs, along with their Sikh preachers were forced into exile, the Sikh shrines passed into the control of the Udāśī Mahants.

Even after the Mughal rule, these shrines continued to be looked after by the Udāsīs, and the post of Granthi-cum-manager passed from father to son. The less important Gurudaras were looked after by the men who wished to dedicate their life to the prayer and the service of the community. With the establishment of the British

It was then a simple Dharm sala (a place of worship), where his disciples gathered to listen to his discourses and to sing hymns. rule new settlement records had to be made. In many of these, the lands and the properties attached to the Gurdwaras were entered against the names of the Mahants.\(^6\)

The Udâsîs in charge of the various Gurdwaras rendered important service to the Sikh religion by keeping the Gurdwaras going and were highly respected as men of high moral character and integrity. They were well versed in the Sikh scriptures and devoted themselves chiefly to reciting and expounding the teachings of the Sikh Gurus. In the earlier stages these Mahants enjoyed the confidence and reverence of Sangats of their areas. They also warned their chelas at the time of admission into their Order to avoid two deadly temptations gold and the women. These Mahants also nominated their successors to the gaddis. Their nominees were accepted by the Sangats. Both Mahants and their chelas enjoyed popular esteem and confidence. But this tradition of purity and austerity seems to have deteriorated as the result of the increase in their income derived from revenue free jagirs bestowed on most of the historic shrines by Maharaja Ranjit Singh and other Sikh Misaldars.\(^7\) The Mahants became inherited masters of the sacred shrines, gave up all symptoms of Sikhism excepting the beard and the turban. Though the Mahants were known to be the managers and custodians, and not the owners of the Gurdwaras, the concerned officials tacitly encouraged them to seek the protection of the law which regarded them as owners. They adopted all sorts of corruption and vices. Idols were placed in various Gurdwaras and their worship was becoming common contrary to the principles of the Sikh gospel.\(^8\)

The misappropriation of the religious funds and change in the life style of the custodian Mahants was being looked down upon by the Sikhs but lack of any social organisation prevented any move to turn them out. Early twentieth century saw the rise of provincial movements such as the Nirankaris, the Namdharis, and the Singh Sabha in conjunction with all India movements such as the Brahmo Samaj, the Dev Samaj and the Arya Samaj. Moreover, the increasing political consciousness and response to Nationalist upsurge throughout the country also played a large part. It was the cumulative effect of these internal and external forces which created an awakening among the people in the Punjab and also the desire among the Sikhs to reform the shrines.⁹

The persecution of the Kukas and the suppression of their movement saw the birth of the Singh Sabha. The Singh Sabha Amritsar was formed, in 1873 to check the Hindu propagation against the Sikh Gurus.¹⁰ At Lahore, another Singh Sabha was formed in 1879. The main task of the Sabha was to spread literacy, education and religious awareness among the Sikhs.¹¹ In 1883, the Lahore and Amritsar Singh Sabhas were merged.¹² Both Singh Sabha and the Chief Khalsa Diwan promoted a modern sense of self consciousness and identity among the Sikhs. The Chief Khalsa Dewan founded in 1902 acted as coordinating body for the Singh Sabha Movement.¹³ On the contrary the Chief Khalsa Dewan helped the British authorities.¹⁴

The Sikh masses looked forward to the Singh Sabha for the eradication of evils which had entered the historical Sikh Shrines under the control of Pujaris and Sadhus.¹⁵ Singh Sabha passed many resolutions and made representations to the Government for the purification of the Sikh shrines but they did not succeed in their mission.¹⁶

The agrarian unrest of 1907 exploded the myth of the loyalty of the Punjabis and marked the beginning of mass political awakening in the province.¹⁷ The revolutionary Ghadr propaganda made major headway in the Punjab during the First World War. Though the movement failed but it was able to make a major contribution towards the articulation of discontentment against the British rule by inspiring many people by their patriotic and revolutionary propaganda.¹⁸

Initiative for the reform was taken by the Sikh and the pro-Sikh news papers as early as 1905, when some of the news papers like the Khalsa Advocate, the Khalsa Samachar, the Khalsa Sewak and The Punjab, began complaining about the management of the Golden Temple, Amritsar and other important Sikh Shrines. These papers expressed grief and pain at the Gurdwaras and other trust holdings being converted into private properties of the Mahants and also other abuses prevailing in the system of management. The Punjab reminded the Mahants that ‘The Gurdwaras belong to the Sikh community and not the priests, who are mere servants of the Panth’.\(^{19}\)

In 1906, under pressure from the Singh Sabhas and the Sikh press, the Chief Khalsa Diwan passed a resolution asking the government that the rules governing the management of the Golden Temple be so changed as to allow the Panth the right to appoint its manager and other officials but it went without any success. After having failed at the resolutions and petitions, some Sikhs of advanced political opinions decided to boycott the temples, to exert greater public pressure on the Mahants and even litigations were tried to get the Gurdwaras vacated but to no success.\(^{20}\)

The resentment of the Sikhs against the British attitude was growing but it could not be channelised. The opportunity came in January 14, 1914 when the British Indian Government demolished the wall of Gurdwara Rakabganj Delhi to the ground on the pretext of making the road run straight.\(^{21}\) Singh Sabha launched protest to the Government. At that time the British Government had entered War and the Sikhs formed considerable proportion of the British Indian army. The Government could not afford to disregard the Sikh sentiments at that time as such the wall of the garden was restored but the Gurdwara wall remained in the same condition. The Singh Sabha leaders gave up the agitation due to their cooperation to the Government during the War. After the War was over, the matter of Gurdwara Rakabganj again got prominence. Sikhs who had helped wholeheartedly to the British Government in the War wanted the restoration of the Gurdwara wall. But British Government did not pay any respect to the sentiments of the Sikhs. The Singh Sabha leaders decided to send Shahidi Jatha\textsuperscript{22} to Delhi to rebuild the demolished wall. Thus, realizing the seriousness of the situation the Government through Maharaja Ripu Daman of Nabha, arranged for the reconstruction of the wall.\textsuperscript{23} This was a great success on the part of the Singh Sabha. The Singh Sabha realizing the importance of Shahidi Jathas, adopted same technique and method to further launch an agitation to free the Gurudwaras from the clutches of the corrupt Mahants.

The demolition of the wall of Gurudwara Rakabganj, Delhi, the tragedy of Budge-Budge, the demobilization of the Sikh soldiers after the War and the unsatisfactory treatment meted out to them during the War, further added to the discontent created by the Ghadrites propaganda. Several other factors contributed to the aggravation of political unrest like failure of summer monsoon, poor rabi harvest, the cost of living rose higher than ever before. Also there was imposition of special tax on urban population. Last of all came the influenza epidemic.\textsuperscript{24}

On the 15\textsuperscript{th} and 16\textsuperscript{th} November 1920, a mass meeting of Nationalist Sikhs was held where the committee of a 175 members was formed. Its main object was to manage, reform and control the Sikh shrines and Gurudwaras. It soon came to be known as Shiromani Gurudwara Prabandhak Committee.\textsuperscript{25} The committee was given the task of the management of the Gurudwaras through its military wing i.e Shiromani Akali Dal and to launch militant agitation through its Akalis Jathas to free the Gurudwaras from the clutches of corrupt, and Hinduised Mahants.\textsuperscript{26}

The reform of the Gurudwaras frequently meant removal of Hinduized priests and Hindu influences, including Hindu idols, from the precincts of Sikh shrines. Some Hindus in the Punjab naturally resented these aspects of the reform movement. Though outwardly the British Government adopted the neutral policy but actually encouraged the Mahants to adopt stiffer attitude towards the Akali reformers and supported them by declaring “any person who attempts to forcibly oust any Mahant … is liable to punishment under the law”.27

The Gurdwara Reform Movement is significant in three respects (1) it created a sense of confidence among the Indians that the British could be forced to meet their genuine demands through non-violent mass movement; (2) it brought the Akali Dal and the Congress leadership very close to each other, giving a great impetus to the freedom movement in Punjab; (3) the Shiromani Gurdwara Prabandhak Committee and the Akali Dal provided the institutional and organizational structure to respond to the aspirations of the newly mobilized Sikh masses, and in the process it acted as the training ground for the emerging Sikh leadership.28

In the course of their five year (1920-25) struggle the Shiromani Gurdwara Prabandhak Committee and the Akali Dal were not only able to oust the Mahants rather obtained the control over all the important Sikh shrines through peaceful agitation and passive sufferings, but also to strengthen the forces of nationalism in the Punjab by ejecting the Mahants, the government appointed managers and other vested interests in the Sikh communities. Once the important Sikh shrines came under the Akali control, the Mahants in charge of the smaller Gurdwaras either voluntarily submitted to the authority of the Shiromani Gurdwara Prabandhak Committee or were made to surrender their shrines and the jagirs attached to them under the provisions of the Sikh Gurdwaras and Shrines Bill passed in July 1925.29

In the Charitable and Religious Endowment Act (Act XIV of 1920)30 some rights were given to the beneficiaries in the control and management of temples. Therefore the Sikh reformers, in the beginning, went to the courts of law in the hope to obtain popular control of their sacred places. Here too disappointment was in store for them. The courts could not help the reformers because of the law, as it stood then, made it obligatory on the part of two or more beneficiaries of a temple to join hands to go to the Deputy Commissioner for permission to sue the Mahants guilty of misappropriation of funds. The Deputy Commissioner, being a support or of the vested interests, used his discretion to deny the necessary permission in most of the cases. In other cases where the reformers succeeded in obtaining the required permission, the cases could not be followed up for want of exorbitant court fees prescribed by the judicial machinery.

Being convinced of the inadequacy and ineffectiveness of the legal remedies for reforms, the reformers now organised themselves in the form of local Akali Jathas. The decisive period in the growth of a modern, militant Sikh identity and the institutionalization of Sikh consciousness came during the Gurdwara Reform Movement. The Sikhs launched agitations at the sights of important Sikh shrines in order to free them from the control of allegedly corrupt and Hinduised Mahants.

Mahant Harnam Singh of Gurdwara Babe-di-Ber, Sialkot died and his minor son Mahant Gurcharan Singh was appointed successor under guardianship of a non-Sikh named Ganda Singh, an honorary Magistrate. It led to resentment among the Singh Sabha and the Sikhs throughout the Punjab. The reformers reacted by filing a civil suit but were ordered by the district judge to pay court fee of rupee 50,000. The reformers failed to pay 50,000 as court fee to file civil suit, thus, resorted to agitation. Ganda Singh placed many hurdles but reformers got control of the shrine by the end of September-October 1920. On October 5, 1920 the Sikhs had a big Dewan and elected permanent Committee of 13 members for the control of Gurdwara Babe-di-Ber Sahib.

The corrupt and non-Sikh practices in the precincts of the Golden Temple and the Akal Takht at Amritsar and official control over its management had been a source of great discontentment among the Sikhs long before the beginning of the movement.

31 The cases of Gurdwara Babe-di-Ber, Sialkot and Panja Sahib could not be perused for want of court fees of Rs. 50,000 in the case of former and Rs. 5,000 in the case of the latter. Partap Singh, Gurdwara Sudhar Lehar, p. 85.

for reform. The Mahants of the Golden temple and the British Deputy Commissioner were hand in glove and were ignoring the sentiments and opinion of the Sikh masses. ‘The government Sarbrah having kept the appointing authority appeased, spent his time in appropriating the huge wealth of the shrine, and consequently, neglected his daily religious duties. Costly gifts to the temple slowly found their way to the homes of the Sarbrah and other priests.\(^{36}\)

The precincts were used by Pandits and Astrologers. The idols were openly worshipped in the Gurudwara. According to contemporary accounts, on Basant and Holi festivals, the whole place degenerated into a rendezvous for the local rogues, thieves and other bad characters. Pornographic literature was freely sold, and brothels were opened in the neighbouring houses.\(^{37}\)

The agitation against the Golden Temple affair had started way back in 1906 when a meeting of the Sikh Youth on 22 December 1906 passed a resolution asking the Government to hand over the control of Darbar Sahib to the Chief Khalsa Dewan. Similar resolutions were passed in the other parts of the Punjab also.\(^{38}\) The Central Sikh League in a meeting held at Amritsar in 1920 again referred to the long standing grievances of the Sikhs connected with the Golden Temple. The demand for the control and management of the Sikh holy shrine Golden Temple was made in the Punjab Legislative Council and Government was requested to make the accounts public. But the movement could not make any headway. It got impetus after the formation of Shiromani Gurdwara Prabandhak committee in 1920.\(^{39}\) Sardar Arur Singh Sarbrah of Golden Temple appeared before the Diwan, begged for forgiveness and announced his resignation.

The Golden Temple and the adjoining Gurdwaras had passed into the control of the Akalis in October 1920. Though Shiromani Gurdwara Prabandhak committee and the Committee appointed by it, controlled the affairs of the Golden Temple but the fact that the keys of Tosha Khana were in the hands of Sunder Singh Ramgarhia gave feeling of Government control over the Gurdwaras. Deputy Commissioner of Amritsar, being suspicious of bonfides of Baba Kharak Singh, the President of the Shiromani Gurdwara Prabandhak committee, took keys of the Tosha (treasury) Khana and gave it to his nominee or Sarbrah. Akalis demanded the keys to be returned to Kharak Singh, the president of Shiromani Gurdwara Prabandhak committee. In a meeting held on October 29, 1921, the executive Committee of Shiromani Gurdwara Prabandhak committee had asked Sunder Singh Ramgarhia, the Government appointed manager, to hand over the keys to Kharak Singh. The Akalis were disturbed when they discovered that Deputy Commissioner Amritsar had sent Lala Amarnath an extra Assistant Commissioner with a Police party to Ramgarhias house to collect the keys of Toshakhana. Protests were carried out by Akalis which resulted in arrest of 193 leading Akalis. Government finally had to give into the Akalis and all arrested were released unconditionally. The Akalis got total control over Gurdwara. Mahatma Gandhi sent a telegram to the new President of the Shiromani Gurdwara Prabandhak committee, ‘First Battle for India’s Freedom Won. Congratulations.’ The British Officer, a District Judge himself arrived at a Dewan held at Akal Takht and handed over the keys of Tosha Khana to Sardar Kharak Singh, President Shiromani Gurdwara Prabandhak committee in October 1921.

The Akali victory at Amritsar with the formation of Shiromani Gurdwara Prabandhak committee and the Shiromani Akali Dal encouraged the local Jathas of the reformers. A Jatha of 25 Akalis was dispatched from Amritsar under the leadership of Bhai Kartar Singh Jhabbar. It reached Panja Sahib on November 18, 1920. The next day the supporters of Mahants had clashed with Akalis. Jathedar Kartar Singh Jhabbar took possession of the cash box containing the daily offerings and declared the Mahant a tankhahia, who was not to be allowed to enter the shrine till he went to the Akal Takht to beg pardon for his acts. Thus Panja Sahib Gurdwara passed into the control of the reformers and a representative management committee was soon formed to look after it.

The Akali occupation of other Gurdwaras of lesser historical significance including Chomala Sahib Lahore, Tham Sahib in village Jhambr Kalan of Lahore district, Khara Sauda and Kar Sahib at Nankana, Chola Sahib at Ludhiana District, Gurdwara at Shekhpur and Khadur Sahib in Amritsar and Anandpur Sahib soon followed. Mahants of most of these shrines on their own swore allegiance to the Shiromani Gurdwara Prabandhak committee and agreed to serve under it. Others were compelled to do so when the cases pending in the courts had been decided in the favour of the Akalis.

The Darbar Sahib and Akal Takht had come under the control of the Sikhs without bloodshed, but at Tarn Taran, and fort-night later, at Nankana Sahib, the birth place of Guru Nanak Dev, the Mahants supported by the British authorities unleashed a violent attack upon hundreds of non-violent Akali volunteers. Later the events at Guru ka Bagh and Jaito were even more tragic. The courage and the perseverance of the Akali volunteers forced the Government to pass the Gurdwara Act in 1925 and to release all Akali prisoners. The Sikhs in-spite of provocations remained peaceful. The principle of non-violent Satyagrah was put to test on a mass scale with great success and this had a significant bearing on subsequent developments in Sikh politic in particular, and in the National Movement in general. Mahatma Gandhi congratulated the Sikh masses and their leaders for achieving success through non-violence.

The Darbar Sahib TarnTaran was founded by Guru Arjun Dev in 1500 AD and was famous for leper curing. It is situated within 15 kms of the city of Amritsar and had been under the same management as that of the Golden Temple and Akal Takht. During the days of Arur Singh, Mahants of TarnTaran became more or less independent and introduced many evil practices within the precincts of Gurdwara. After the sanctity of Gurdwara at Amritsar had been restored those at TarnTaran naturally attracted the attention of the Akali reformers. Bhai Mohan Singh Vaid, a local leader of the reform movement is said to have invited the attention of the Mahants to the evils prevalent in the system of management and respectfully asked them to improve their ways. Sardar Lachhman Singh is also said to have made a similar plea. Sardar Lachhman Singh and the girls of his school were not allowed to enter the Gurdwara to recite shabads at Gurdwara.

When a local Jatha advised the Mahants to arrange for the recitation of Asa di war January 11, 1921, the Mahants are said to have beaten up the members of the Jatha with lathis. In general meeting at Akal Takht on January 24, 1921, the Akalis decided to march towards the Tarntaran to purify the place. On January 26, 1921 about 40 Akalis under the leadership of Teja Singh Bhhuchar reached there. The priest whose number is estimated to be 70, tried to provoke the Akalis but the clash was avoided a compromise was reached. The priest agreed to the formation of a joint committee to settle the dispute, which was a trick to prepare for an attack. At the same night the drunken priest around 9 pm attacked the peaceful and unsuspecting Akalis. Some members of the Jatha who were inside the Gurdwara were seriously wounded.

The priests used lathis and daggers and brick-bats. The holy place was soon smeared with blood of the wounded Akali volunteers. Bhai Hazara Singh and Hukum Singh succumbed to their injuries. On receiving this news the district Magistrate, and the Superintendent of Police and other officials rushed to the place to meet the leaders of both the parties. On finding that Akalis were not to be blamed they expressed their sympathies for them by an official order the priests were barred from entering the Gurdwara until the matter was decided by the Prabandhak Committee. The Gurdwara having thus come into the hands of the reformers, a provincial committee of management was formed, pending the appointment of a regular committee by the Shiromani Gurdwara Prabandhak committee. From Tarntaran a Jatha proceeded to Naurangabad and purified the shrine.

Nankana, the birth place of Guru Nanak was most richly endowed Sikh shrine. After the death of Mahant Sadhu Ram, Narain Das managed the Janam

56 Apart from the Gurdwara of Janam Asthan where Guru Nanak was born, there are over half a dozen other shrines connected with different events connected with early life of the Guru like; Bal Lila, where Guru Nanak used to play during his childhood; Kiara Sahib, where the Guru made up the loss of a farmer whose field were spoilt by the Guru’s buffalos; Mal sahib, where a snake is said to have spread its hood to protect the Guru from the sun; Khara Sauda, where Guru made a Asthan. Narain Das lived in the Gurdwara with a mistress and was known to have invited prostitutes to dance in the sacred premises. Though Sikhs wanted to eject him forcefully but the Mahant had the backing of local officials. Various Singh Sabhas had passed resolutions requesting the Government against the Mahant. The Akali reformers had made similar requests to Mahant Narain Das for reform. Narain Das on his own had sought Government assurance through Mr. CM King, the Commissioner of Lahore Division. A meeting of over 60 Mahants was held at Nankana Sahib and it was decided not to recognize the newly formed Shiromani Gurdwara Prabandhak committee. Rather a new Committee was formed with Narain Das as President and Mahant Basant Das as its Secretary. They also started Sant Sewak news paper from Lahore. Fearing the fate of his Gurdwara, he made elaborate defense preparations, fortified Nankana and sought police protection along with his personal security guards. The act of Mahant was justified by the Mr. CM King, the Commissioner of Lahore Division.

On January 24, 1921 the Shiromani Gurdwara Prabandhak committee decided to hold a Dewan at Nankana from March 4 to 6, 1921. Mahant Narain Das tried to placate the Akalis by showing his desire for a compromise. He did not attend meeting at Sachha Sauda, Sultanpur called by Shiromani Gurdwara Prabandhak committee. Bhai Lachhman Singh left for Nankana Sahib February 19, 1921 and on February 20, 1921. Akalis led by Lachhman Singh Dharowalia entered the Gurdwara. The gates of the shrines were closed and the thugs of Narain Das attacked the non-violent and bare handed jatha with swords and hatchets and fire arms. The dead and dying Akalis were dragged to a pile of logs which had been collected earlier.

and burnt. By the time the police and the locals came to the scene 130 men had been consumed by the flames. Gurdwara was taken over by the army. Jathedar Jhhabbar along with his 2200 Akali Jatha marched towards Nankana to take possession of Gurdwara. He was warned at Khipwala through orders of Deputy Commissioner Lahore, Mr. Currie. Ignoring the warning they reached Janam Asthan and took control of the Gurdwara. Now Deputy Commissioner of Lahore consulted Commissioner of Lahore and handed over the keys to the representatives of Shiromani Gurdwara Prabandhak Committee. After the arrest of Narain Das Mahants of more than half a dozen, other local Gurdwaras, felt utterly demoralized and surrendered their shrines to Shiromani Gurdwara Prabandhak committee. In-spite of a strong criticism of their action of the local officials and their responsibility for the tragedy, neither Viceroy of India nor any other member of Executive Council asked the Government of Punjab to take any action against the concerned officials. This shows that officials wanted the growing movement of Akalis to be crushed through Mahants and thus to save themselves from incurring the displeasure of the Sikh community.

Guru ka Bagh, a small shrine 13 miles away from Amritsar had been erected to commemorate the visit of Guru Arjun. Adjacent to the shrine was a plot of land on which acacia (Kikar tree) trees were planted to provide firewood for Guru ka langar. The Udasi Mahant Sunder Das accepted baptism and submitted himself to the authority of an elected committee of management consisting of 11 members appointed by Shiromani Gurdwara Prabandhak committee. Suddenly, in the first week of August 1921 he lodged a complaint that the Akalis were cutting timber from the Gurudwara land. Police arrested the Akalis and charged them with criminal trespass. Akalis held a meeting at Guru ka Bagh where police dispersed them and arrested leaders, including Mehtab Singh and Master Tara Singh. The Shiromani Gurdwara Prabandhak committee took the challenge and Jathas of 100 Akalis each were Maharaja Ripudaman Singh of Nabha who ascended the throne on 20 December 1911, was made to abdicate in favour of his minor son, Partap Singh, on 9 July 1923\textsuperscript{76}. the Maharaja of Nabha’s dispute was with Maharaja of Patiala and not with the Government of India. Maharaja had great sympathy with the aware of his sympathies with the nationalist and Akali Movements. As the news of the abdication of the Maharaja and his removal to Dehra Dun was made public, the Pro-Akali newspapers strongly reacted and declared that the statements issued by Government were false and deceptive which were obtained as a result of farcical display of chargesheets and that the valuables of Maharaja’s family were forcibly taken away. Leaders of Indian National Congress argued that Maharaja was ‘deposed not for his short comings but for his virtues. The Shiromani Akali Dal passed formal resolutions urging the Shiromani Gurdwara Prabandhak Committee to raise a typhoon of agitation till the Maharaja was restored.

The Akali leadership formally took up the question of the restoration of the Maharaja by issuing a communiqué on 9 July 1923. 29 July was fixed as a day of Prayer and 9 Sept. 1923, the day for barefooted Protest March. The Sangat was also urged to Pass resolution against the action of Government and Politics agent another communiqué issued on 10 July 1923, it was stated that the Shiromani Gurdwara Prabandhak Committee had very good reasons to believe that the abdication of the Maharaja was not voluntary but had been exorted by official pressure; that the weakening of the Nabha was the thin end of the wedge against an important section of the Sikh Community. Diwans were held in different parts of Nabha. One such Diwan was organized at Jaito on 25 August 1923. On the third day-27 August – certain resolutions were passed. Under the order of Gurdial Singh, the Assistant Administrator, the State police arrested the organizers –Inder Singh and other Akalis on charges of delivering ‘political speeches. The incident offered the Akalis a challenge and the Diwan, which was originally fixed – for three days and was to disperse on 27 August 1923 was extended indefinitely.

File No. 70 (Nabha Records) at P.S.A Patiala as quoted by Mohinder Singh, p. 73.
The Shiromani Gurdwara Prabandhak Committee passed a resolution to observe 9 September 1923\textsuperscript{93} as Nabha Day. The Sikhs of Nabha organized a non-stop recitation of the \textit{Granth} in their \textit{Gurdwaras}. Such ceremonial was held at the temple at Gangsar in Village Jaito. It was interrupted by the Nabha Police, in their bid to arrest the Akalis, including the one reading the holy \textit{Granth}.

Daily \textit{Jathas} were sent to Jaito from Akal Takhat at Amritsar. In the beginning \textit{Jathas} of 25 members daily walked to jaito after taking Pledge before Akal Takhat\textsuperscript{94}. The Shiromani Gurdwara Prabandhak Committee and the Akali Dal were declared illegal\textsuperscript{95}, and 59 Akali leaders were arrested. Now the sizes of \textit{Jathas} going to Jaito increased from Twenty five each to a hundred and then from one hundred to five hundred. Indian National Congress had full sympathy with the \textit{morchas}. Among those arrested at Jaito was Jawahar Lal Nehru\textsuperscript{96}.

While Jaito (Nabha) \textit{Morcha} was going on, a second front was opened at Bhai Pheru in Lahore, were the \textit{Mahant} had resiled from an earlier agreement will the Akalis and charged them for trespass. Batches of 25 Akalis began to present themselves for arrest everyday at Bhai Pheru\textsuperscript{97}.

The unending stream of Passive resisters that continued to arrive at Jaito and Bhai Pheru exasperated the government, and it made a desperate bid to smash the movement. In first week of January 1924, Amritsar Police raided Akal Thakat, seized documents of the Shiromani Gurdwara Prabandhak Committee and arrested another 62 men. The English administrator ordered the confiscation of properties of Akalis in the state, restricted many thousands to their villages, and authorized use of greater violence against \textit{Jathas} Coming to Jaito. On Feb 21, 1924\textsuperscript{98} one such \textit{jatha} of 500 Akalis arrived at Jaito and on its refusal to disperse was fired\textsuperscript{99} on by the state police resulting in considerable loss of life. Second \textit{Shahidi Jatha} started on 28 Feb. 1924.

Third Shahidi Jatha started on March 22, fourth Shahidi Jatha on March 27 and fifth Shahidi Jatha on 12 April 1924\textsuperscript{100}. Government tried to isolate Akalis by giving wide publicity to the story that the Akalis wished to restore Sikh rule in the Punjab. Negotiations were started between the Akali leadership and the British Officials for a solution to the Jaito problem. While the Nabha authorities and the Akali Leadership were busy negotiation over the various issues, the passage, in the meantime, of the Sikh Gurdwaras and Shrine Bills, automatically settled the Jaito and other issues. With regard to the Nabha Affair, Malcolm Hailey, the Governor of the Punjab made the following declaration;

The Administrator of Nabha will permit bands of pilgrims to proceed for religious worship to the Gangsar Gurdwara under the certain rules.\textsuperscript{101} After the passage of the Bill, Bhai Jodh Singh, Sardar Narain Singh and other Sikh Members of the Legislative Council met the Akali leaders in jail and obtained their approval of the Bill and stoppinig of Jathas to Bhai Pheru and Jaito. Bhai Jodh Singh arranged with Mr. Wilson Johnson, the Administrator of Nabha, for the completion of the Akand Paths at Jaito. The first Jatha, consisting among others the Udāsī and Nirmala Sadhus, left Akal Takhat under the leadership of Bhai Jodh Singh and arrived at Jaito on 21 July 1925. Another Jatha arrived from Delhi the same day. On 27 July 1925, more Jathas reached Jaito after being released from the Nabha Beers and other jails. The deadlock finally ended with the Akalis completing their 101 Akhand Paths on 6\textsuperscript{th} August 1925\textsuperscript{102}. The question of Maharaja Restoration was still unsettled.

The refusal of the Maharaja to give the required statement to the Shiromani Gurdwara Prabandhak Committee and his public dissociation with the Akalis and their agitation further weakened the position of those Akali leaders who still wanted to carry on the struggle for his restoration. Whatever might have been the facts of his case, the Maharaja had at the stage, in the words of Mahatma Gandhi; ‘made it practically impossible for his well wishers to carry on an effective agitation for his restoration\textsuperscript{103}.

Maharaja accused Akalis of being treacherous and unfaithful and requested them not to give up the issue of his restoration\textsuperscript{104}. After the passage of the Bill and the dropping of the Nabha question by the Akali leadership, he was suddenly removed from Dehra Dun to far-off Kodai Kanal in the South to spend the remaining part of his life, in virtual exile till his death on 14 December 1942.

Finally, the Bill met all the Akali demands and on 2 Nov 1925, The Sikh Gurduara and Shrines act was enforced.\textsuperscript{105} The act, as it's preamble declares, aimed at providing "for the better administration of certain Sikh Gurduaras and for enquiries into matters and settlement of disputes connected there with..."

The Act has three parts. Part I contains, besides preliminary matters such as title, extent and definitions, reference to Gurduaras covered by the Act, procedure for bringing other Gurduaras under its purview, and appointment of and procedures for a Gurduara Tribunal. Interestingly, the definition clause does not define a "Sikh Gurduara," but a subsequent clause, Section 2.10, lays down a "notified Sikh Gurduara" as any Gurduara "declared by notification of the local government under the provision of this Act to be a Sikh Gurduara." Chapter I of this part (Sections 3 to 11) and the schedules referred to therein are the vital part of the Act.

Two categories of Sikh Gurduaras are envisaged, scheduled and unscheduled.

\textsuperscript{104} For text of the Letter see Ganda Singh (Ed.), Confidential Papers of the Akali Movement, pp. 172-4., as quoted by Mohinder Singh, p. 85.

\textsuperscript{105} In the entire agitation (at Tarn Taran, Nankana Sahib, Guru-Ka-Bagh, Bhai Pheru and Jaito), it is estimated, thirty thousands of the Sikhs went to jail, 15 lacs Rupees were collected as fine. About 400 lives were lost and number of wounded was about 2000; Khushwant Singh, History Of The Sikhs, vol. 2, pp. 212-213. The Sikh Gurduaras Act of 1925 had two schedules; the first listed 232 shrines. Another 28 were added to the lists which were recognized as Sikh Gurduaras without further enquiry. The second schedule listed 224 Akharas of Udâsis or Nirmalas which were not to be declared gurdwaras unless they fulfilled certain conditions. Any Sikh could put in a petition within one year to have any institution (except those listed in the second schedule) declared a gurdwara; Khushwant Singh, History Of The Sikhs, vol. 2, pp. fn 34; Also see; S.C Mittal, Freedom Movement in Punjab, (1905-1929), p. 179; See, Appendix, II, III and IV.

5 April 1921-First Sikh Gurduaras and Shrines Bill introduced in the Pb. Legal Council.
7 Nov.1922—Second Sikh Gurduaras and Shrines Bill introduced in the Pb. Legal Council.
7 July 1925—Sikh Gurduaras and Shrines Bill passed in the Punjab Legal Council.
28 July 1925—Gurdwara Bill gets the approval of Governor General.
Schedule I contains Important historical shrines where there could be no doubt about their being Sikh Gurdwara indisputably owned by Sikhs are listed in Schedule I of the Act. Originally two hundred and forty one Gurdwaras were entered in this Schedule, out of which sixty five remained in Pakistan after the partition of the Punjab. However, one hundred and seventy three more Gurdwaras within the state of Patiala and East Punjab States Union were added to it by the Amending Act of 1959.

Schedule II contains the details of institutions which were not "Sikh" gurdwaras about the control of which no dispute could be raised. It enlisted two hundred and twenty four Akharas of Udāsīs or Nirmalas which were not to be declared Gurdwaras unless they fulfilled certain conditions. A list of one hundred and sixteen Deras, Akharas and Dharmsalas was declared as Udāsī institutions without any further enquiry. In respect of Gurdwaras listed in these two schedules or the scheduled Gurdwaras as they are called, the State Government issued a notification in the official Gazette, declaring them to be Sikh Guudwaras. The notification also detailed the property claimed by each Gurdwara.

A tribunal of three judges was set up to determine whether an institution was or was not a Gurdwara and the compensation, if any to be paid to any one deprived of possession. The tribunal’s findings were subject to appeal to the High Court. The act provided for elected bodies to replace the mahants. The central body, the Shiromani Gurdwara Prabandhak committee was to consist of 151 members of whom 120 were to be elected, 12 nominated by the Sikh states, 14 to be co-opted, and 5 to represent the four chief shrines of the faith.

Local gurdwaras were to have their own elected bodies of management with one nominee of the Shiromani Gurdwara Prabandhak Committee on its committee. The act also indicated in what way the income of gurdwaras was to be utilized. The most important part of the act was to define a Sikh as “one who believed in the ten gurus and the Granth Sahib and was not a patit(apostate).” This last provision was particularly odious to the Hindu members of the Legislative Council. The Sikh Gurdwaras and Shrines Bill gave the Shiromani Gurdwara Prabandhak Committee supreme control over two hundred and forty one important and historic Gurdwaras under undisputed Akali control.
Comparative analysis of the Census figures of the Udāsīs from 1881 onwards shows a regular decline in their numerical strength. The reports show that the number of Hindu Udāsīs had always been more than the Sikh Udāsīs. There was a general decrease in the figures of the Hindus in the Censuses of 1911 and 1931, but the number of Hindu Udāsīs between the years from 1921 to 1931 increased by 5.3 %. In 1921, the number of Hindu Udāsīs was 2,661 and in 1931 it rose to 2,803. On the other hand, the population of the Sikhs was growing at each Census, except during the decade from 1881 to 1891 and in 1881 it was considerably less than half of what was recorded in 1931. In 1881, the Sikhs numbered 1,706,909 and by 1931 they numbered 4,071,624\(^{106}\), whereas the number of Udāsīs had always remained low.

It is important to note that the highest increase in the number of the Udāsīs in fifty years from 1881 to 1931 was in the year of 1881, when 14,149 Udāsīs recorded themselves as Hindu Udāsīs and 2,243 as Sikh Udāsīs, the total number being 16,392. In the coming years, their number showed a downward trend. In 1891, the recorded number of the Hindu Udāsīs was 11,835 and the Sikh Udāsīs was 4,170, the total being 16,005. In 1901, those who recorded themselves as the Hindu Udāsīs were 9,017 and the Sikh Udāsīs 2,258, the total being 11,275. In 1911, the number was still decreasing, when there were 2,031 Hindu Udāsīs and 1,470 Sikh Udāsīs, total being 3,501, recorded as the Udāsīs. In 1921, the ratio was 2,661 and 842, the total being 3,503. The resumption of revenue-free-grants, the Akali - Udāsī conflict, and the Gurdwara Reform Movement served a serious setback and the Udāsīs started sending petitions to the British Government authorities requesting them to consider them as Hindus, instead of recording them as Sikhs in the Census of 1931, as they already had been termed as Sikhs in the previous Census of 1921. But, result was that in 1931, the those who recorded them as Hindu Udãsîs, were only 2,803, and the number of Sikh Udãsîs was only 385, the total being 3,188 only.

Surprisingly, the Udãsîs who generally practised celibacy, had 3,150 female Hindu Udãsîs and 665 Sikh female Udãsîs in 1881. The total of female Udãsîs recorded in 1881 was 3,815. In 1901, the number of female Hindu Udãsîs was 1,863 and Sikh female Udãsîs 502, the total being 2,365. During the thirty Years from 1881 to 1901, the number of female Udãsîs was also decreasing. It is significant to note that they asserted their position in thirty years from 1881 to 1901. Afterwards, because of the upcoming political changes the females did not bother to get themselves registered in the Census Reports.

The Akalis, who had won their struggle against the Mahants and the Government control over their Gurdwaras, now turned against each other. During the period from 1920 to 25, the Hindus supported the Udāsī Mahants against the Akalis. This widened the gulf between the two communities. The break away from Hinduism, to which Kahan Singh of Nabha had given expression in his Pamphlet ‘Hindu Nahin Hain’ was even more emphatically stated by Mehtab Singh in a speech he delivered in the first Gurdwara Bill\textsuperscript{107}. Whether the Sikhs were a separate people or a branch of the Hindu social system became a major issue in the years that followed. Similarly, the Udāsīs started styling themselves as Hindus and requested the British Government authorities that in the previous Censuses they were termed as Sikhs and now they be considered Hindus in the Census of 1931 and not as Sikhs.

In order to maintain their respectable position in the changed historical situation, the udâsîs started making petitions requesting that they should be considered as sadhus and distinct from the beggars in the forthcoming Census of 1931. Udâsî Mahamandal, Punjab, Gujranwala; Sindh prant Udâsî Sadhu Mahamandal, Karachi; Sri Guru Sri Chander Updeshak Sabha, Sakhar, Sindh; Udâsîn Mahamandal, Meva Mandi, Lahore; Puna Udâsîn Mandal; Panchayti Akhara Bara Udâsîn, Allahabad; Sadhu Bela Tirath, Sindh and many other udâsî Mahants and udâsî associations sent their petitions mentioning “We have observed with pain that there is reserved one column in which under the heading of “Sadhus” the profession beggars are also entered and thus classed as “Sadhus”. The term “Sadhus” amongst Hindus in India signifies those who preach religion or, are incharge, management or control of religious institutions and their status in life is looked upon with respect and reverence. Whereas the profession of begging is confined mostly to very low classes amongst the Hindus and very often to those who are termed untouchables very commonly known in province of Sindh as “Menghwar”. It may be that one thing is common between those two classes, that both live on public money but the former viz: the Hindu “Sadhus” on account of the services of a very high order that they render to the public, just as priests and ministers among the missionaries in England, France, Italy, and other places on the continent of Europe and the latter viz: the beggars in order to avoid doing honest labour to earn their living take the begging and are thus burden on the society instead of being of any help or assistance to the Society or State. …………."

Under the circumstances we pray that you will be pleased to issue directions for the next census that only those persons should be classed as “Sadhus” who are such within the liberal and colloquial meaning and significance of the term “Sadhus” as used and understood in this country and entered under the column which in the form of the Census of 1921 bore No. 165 with the heading “Priests Ministers” etc”.

The Udâsîs also requested the Census Commissioner that they were termed as Sikhs in the census records of 1921 and that in the forthcoming census of 1931 the Udâsî Sadhus be termed as Hindus. They made it clear that if they were not considered as Hindus they would be forced to show their resentment through bycotting the census of 1931\textsuperscript{108}. They mentioned “the Udāsī Sadhus are Hindus and in every census they are entered in the column of Hindus and not with Singh community because Singh community is quite separate from us, Udāsī Sadhus are not Sikhs and Singh are not Udāsīs. We worship according to Sanatani Hindus and it is the duty of Udāsī Sadhus to preach the religious duties, while the Sikhs do not belong to the preaching class, therefore the Provincial Governments may be advised to enter the Sadhus in the column of Hindus and not with Sikhs”.

The Census Commissioner assured the petitioners that differentiation between religious Mendicants and mere beggars will be kept in view\textsuperscript{109} and would be considered as ‘Religious Mendicants’ under group 164, order 45 (Religion) class C (Public Administration and Liberal Arts) whereas beggars were to be returned under group 193 as ‘Beggars and Vagrants’, order 54 (Beggars etc.), class D. (miscellaneous), sub-class XII (un-productive). Responding to the petitioners the Census Commissioner’s letter read\textsuperscript{110}, “It is understood that the majority of the Udāsīs belonged to the Sikh community ten years ago, and in consequently the instructions for recording them as Sikhs were included in the Punjab census code of 1921. It is now reported that the majority are Hindus. Consequently a return of religion Hindu, Caste, Udāsī will be included with Hindus and not with Sikhs. The representation is the result of misunderstanding, and the Superintendent of Census operation, Punjab is amending these instructions so as to leave no doubt on the point. The petitioners may be advised accordingly”\textsuperscript{111}.

Thus, we find that many cases to save the institutions under their control were filed by the Udāsīs whereas they were countered by the Sikhs. All India Reporter 1945 Sind 177 mentioned that ‘the Udāsīs are schismatic holding a position somewhere between orthodox Hindus and Sikhs.’ The All India Reporter 1939 Lahore said, ‘though they worship Samadhs, etc., they do owe reverence to the Granth Sahib without completely renouncing Hinduism. Owing to their, this intermediate position, it is possible for Udāsīs to be in-charge of so called Sikh Gurdwara property. It however does not follow that the institution is a Sikh Gurdwara and not true Udāsī institution merely because the Granth Sahib is recited in it. Again this does not entitle the Sikhs to claim to be associated in the management of the institution.

A case decided by the Honourable Lahore High Court by Double Bench (D.B.) Consisting of Honourable Justice Addison and Monroe and reported in 1934 All India Reporter at page 180, first appeal no.1875 of 1931, decided on 15 Nov. 1933. The case is regarding a Dharmasala at Sangatpura in Amritsar District. Sohan Das and his brother the petitioners asserted that Sohan Das was the Mahant of the Dharmasala situated at Sangatpura in Amritsar. They claimed that the Dharmasala was not a Sikh Gurudwara, rather it had been a place of public worship since 1853. The Dharmasala contained a samadh and that the Mahants are Udāsī who do not fall into Gurudwara Act. The claim was objected by Bela Singh and others that the place of worship had been so since 1853 and such worship was connected with the Granth Sahib and the village where Dharmasala was situated was a Sikh village. They asserted that the Samadh existed from recent times more probably after the Sikh Gurudwara controversy had become acute and the importance of the Samadh had been realized by the Udāsī Mahants. Thirdly, the institution falls within Sikh Gurudwara act (8 of 1925) S.16 (2) (iii).

The court asked the Patwari of Sangatpura to send his report. The report of Patwari mentioned three points of observation. Firstly, that the Dharmasala was built of kuttcha massonary. It was a Sikh Village and the Granth Sahib was recited over there. Secondly, in 1890 when Mahant Ram Das had stated that Granth Sahib was recited, he did not mention about the existence of samadh. When the Sikh Villagers complained against the conduct of Sham Dass on July 25, 1912, an order was made by Deputy Commissioner of Amritsar for a mutation of the Muafi in the name of the Dharmasala with Sohan Das as manager. Thirdly, it was only in 1911 when the petitioner Sohan Das filed the case that he claimed it to be a Dharmasala where Granth Sahib was recited by him and his brother and that there was a Samadh also. It was on this basis that he claimed it to be an Udāsi dera. The Tribunal finally observed that there was no documentary evidence of the early existence of Samadh. It is a later thought probably prompted by Gurudwara controversy 1925 that the petitioner had realized the importance of Samadh and laid false claims. The tribunal decision declared in favor of Dharmasala to be a Gurduwara and the judge Addison declared “I hold therefore that the evidence supports the conclusion of the majority of the Tribunal that this institution fall with in S.16 (2) (iii) of the Act and the Tribunal dismissed this appeal with costs”\(^{122}\). Means it is not Udāsi establishment but a Sikh Gurudwara.

The case of Mul Singh verses Harnam Singh reported in the All India Reporter 1934 Lahore 173, first appeal no. 1366 of 1931 decided in the court of Addison and Monroe JJ on 28 November 1933. The petitioner Mul Singh claimed that Dharmasala in Pindi Bhattian in Gujranwala District was not a Sikh Gurduwara, become certain Hindus performed Puja over there. But the objectors Harnam Singh and others claimed that it was a Sikh Shrine as Granth Sahib was worshipped there, and it was established for the use by Sikhs for purpose of public worship. The Judge Addison observed that as a few or certain Hindus worshipped Granth Sahib there, does not conclude that the shrine was of Hindus. Secondly Mul Singh claimed that dharmasla in Pindi Bhattian in Gujranwala was not a Sikh Shrine and that Dharmasala was founded by the ancestors of Mul Singh during the times of Ranjit Singh in 1804 and grants were given by Sardar Dal Singh Kalianwala in 1804 and by Diwan Sawan Mal in 1834 one of the Kardars of Ranjit Singh\(^{123}\). Thirdly, the earlier holders of the Dera were Bhai Sujan Singh and Bhai Jagat Singh. Jagat Singh died in 1862 ad was succeeded by Hardial Singh who was succeeded by Hira Singh the father of Mul Singh. Hira Singh was Succeeded by Ladha Singh and then by Hazura Singh brother of Mul Singh. Mul Singh succeeded his brother. Fourthly, Pindi Bhattian was a small town, containing Hindu Arora community, many of whom were Sikhs. The Sikhs were in majority in the town and the Hindus who believed in Guru Granth Sahib were considered as Sahejdhari Sikhs. He observed that the Hindus of Punjab and of Pindi Bhattian read and respected Granth Sahib. So the petitioner had claimed it to be a Dharmsala of Udasis.

The judge Addison’s final observation was that Dharmsala was founded by ancestor of petitioner, grants were made by Ranjit Singh, Granth Sahib was read there in 1858 and in 1863, to which the both sides agree, petitioner Mul Singh & his brother Hazura Singh, made a statement on the death of their father Hari Singh that both them rendered service at Dharmsala and read Granth Sahib aloud. Mul Singh a zaildar and a Sikh preacher held a Diman at Dharmsala in 1907. He was asked to do so by the Sikhs and Sehjdharis of the place. He baptized 13 or 14 of those who attended including Mul Singh the present petitioner. He made an appeal for funds and in this respect his statement was corroborated by Kartar Singh, another witness. This evidence established that Mul Singh was a Sikh though Mul Singh has denied this.

The evidence of Darshan Singh cousin of Mul Singh stated that 4 or 5 years back the Sikh Sangat of the town had expelled Mul Singh and appointed him as the Granthi of the Gurudwara. It was declared “of these facts that this institution cannot be held to be a Hindu institution”, so the Tribunal dismissed the appeal with costs.

Another such case filed in the court of Addison and Monroe J.J., AIR 1934 Lahore 398, was of petitioner Puran Das V/s Kartar Singh and others, first appeal no. 920, 1931, decided on 29 Jan. 1934. The petitioner Puran Das claimed that Gurdwara Jagranwan Wala situated in Kasel in Amritsar, District was a Udãsi dera. His case was contested by Kartar Singh and others. Gurduwara was found around 1823, the earliest evidence of which is contained in Mauafi proceedings. Through an order of exta assistant commissioner, Amritsar made on 20 Sept. 1853 (ex-O-A-2) it was found that Granth Sahib was read in this institution which was established about 30 years ago. Granthi Sahib Das’s statement made on 27 Sept. 1851 showed that the Dera was handed over to his predecessor for rendering service to Dharmsala; there were also samadhs at Kasel and that in cumbents have always been Udãsis. Monroe observed:

126 Ibid., 1934, Lahore, p. 398.
“In my opinion the objectors have established that this institution was established for use by Sikhs for the purpose of Public worship. It follows that the findings of the Tribunal is correct and I would dismiss this appeal with costs.” Addison agreed to Monroe’s view\textsuperscript{127} that this was not Udāsi Dera rather a Sikh Gurdwara.

Legislation passed by the Punjab Legislative Council which marked the culmination of the struggle of the Sikh people from 1920 to wrest control of their places of worship from the Mahants or priests into whose hands they had passed during the eighteenth century, when the Khalsa were driven from their homes to seek safety in remote hills and deserts. When they later on established their sway in the Punjab, the Sikhs rebuilt their shrines endowing them with large jagirs and estates. The management, however, remained with the priests, belonging mainly to the Udāsi sect, who, after the advent of the British in 1849, began to consider the shrines and lands attached to them as their personal properties and to appropriating the income accruing from them to their private use. Some of them alienated or sold Gurdwara properties at will. They had introduced ceremonial which was anathema to orthodox Sikhs. Besides, there were complaints of immorality against them. All these factors gave rise to what is known as the Gurudwara Reform movement during which Sikhs had to court jail on a large scale and suffer atrocity and death.

The British government, favoured the priests, eventually relented under popular pressure and padded, in the first instance, Sikh Gurdwara and Shrines Act, which envisaged a committee nominated by the government to take over control of the Gurdwaras. This, however, was not acceptable to the Akali leaders and remained for this reason a dead letter. The agitation continued and the government had another draft worked out. Akali counsel was sought this time and the principal demand about the shrines being handed over or the management to a representative body of the Sikhs was conceded. The Bill was moved in the Punjab Legislative Council by Sardar Tara Singh of Moga on 7 May 1925 and piloted by another Sikh member. Bhai Jodh Singh, eminent educationist and theologian. The bill was, in the first instance, referred to a select committee which presented its report on 20 June. The Council passed the bill on 7 July. It was published in the Punjab Government Gazette on 7 Aug. and it became operative on 1 Nov. 1925 as The Sikh Gurdwaras Act, 1925 (Punjab Act VIII of 1925).

CHAPTER-VIII
CONCLUSION

The present work brings to light the state of affairs of the Udāsīs in the colonial Punjab in comparison to their position under the predecessors of the new rulers. Among all the non-conformists of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries within the Sikh history and tradition, the Udāsīs alone survived as a prominent religious group and flourished more significantly during the period of Sikh rule. The respect they paid to Guru Nanak, Guru Granth Sahib and the early Sikh traditions, brought them close to the Sikhs, who acknowledged their presence in the Gurdwara, and considered them part and parcel of their faith. Their humanitarian efforts, philanthropic works, affable association with general public, undisruptive activities and pro-establishment stance towards the state helped in the preservation and growth of the Sikh faith and its tenets in the troubled times of the Sikh history. Another notable cause of their growing affinity with the Sikhs was that the new Order of preachers, called the Udāsīs, attained more prominence due to the fact that the Masands had become greedy and corrupt. Coming to the later period of the Mughal rule, the Udāsīs alone functioned with the old trust and served as custodians of the Sikh shrines. In the darkest days of the Sikh history, when the regular Sikhs were away from their homes or were engaged in fighting, the Udāsīs kept the torch of Sikhism burning high.

The Udāsīs emerged in the sixteenth century under Baba Sri Chand, the eldest son of Nanak, propagating and accepting the theory of penance, restrain and asceticism, contrary to Nanak’s admiration and belief in family life. Sri Chand remained a celibate throughout his life. Though Sri Chand’s relations with Guru Angad and Guru Amar Das remained strained, but later on, he seems to have developed cordial relations with Guru Ram Das, Guru Arjan Dev and Guru Hargobind. Moreover, Baba Sri Chand is believed to have passed the Udāsīs’s line of succession to Baba Gurditta, the eldest son of Guru Hargobind. But, it is difficult to uphold this claim of the Udāsīs as no certain date of the death of Baba Sri Chand is available. It is further believed that Baba Gurditta established the four Orders of the Udāsīs, called the dhuans (hearth)s which came to be known as the adi-Udāsīs. Besides the four dhunas, there emerged six bakshishes (bounties) and various sub-bakshishes during the pontificates of Guru Hargobind, Guru Har Rai, Guru Tegh Bahadur and Guru Gobind Singh for the expansion and consolidation of the Udāsī movement.

II

The Udāsī centres played a significant role in establishing a distinct identity of the Udāsīs. The word establishment has been used for Akharas, Asthan, Deras, Darbars, Dharmasalas, Samadhs, and Gurdwaras which once were under the control and management of the Udāsī Mahants. The Udāsī establishments were found not only in the Punjab but also in other parts of the Indian sub-continent. Most of the Udāsī establishments, with a few exceptions, came into prominence during the period of Sikh rule, particularly during the reign of Maharaja Ranjit Singh. The Udāsī centres were found concentrated in the districts of Bari, Rachna and Bist Jalandhar Doabs.

By the time, the British annexed the Punjab, the number of the Udāsī establishments was over two hundred and fifty, which included both large and small centres. Many of these centers continued to the British times and significantly, by 1920s, when the Akali-Udāsī conflict over the issue of identity and control of the Sikh Gurdwaras was at its height, the number of Udāsī establishments was reduced to only eighty one. Interestingly, in 1950’s, according to, a research scholar of Shiromani Gurdwara Prabandhak Committee, Randhir Singh, the number of the centres still under the control of Udāsīs was about one hundred and twenty three. However, decrease in the number of Udāsī Centres may be explained with reference to the partial withdrawal of the dharmarth grants of the Udāsīs by the new rulers. This proved a major set back to the Udāsīs and the number of their establishments in early 20th century. The rise of the Singh Sabhas and the Gurdwara Reform movement also further affected the position of the Udāsīs under the British. The highest concentration of the Udāsī establishments even in early 20th century was found almost in the same areas or the districts, as it existed during the period of Sikh rule. Moreover, though the number of Udāsī centres gradually decreased in those districts, the core area of the Udāsī influence, however, remained the same during the different phases of their history under the British.
The Udāsī establishments played an important role in the indigenous system of education in the Punjab. Religious education of fundamental character was given in almost all the Udāsī institutions. In the documentary evidence available in abundance in the National archives of India, New Delhi, relating to dharmarth lands of the Udāsīs, references to separate schools of Gurmukhi and Sanskrit were found attached with some of the famous Udāsīs Akharas. Udāsī institutions giving instructions both in Gurmukhi and Sanskrit were found scattered over more than half a dozen district of the Punjab in districts Amritsar, Gurdaspur, Lahore, Montgomoery, Bannu, Jhang, Ludhiana and Jalandhar. Udāsī Centres imparting religious education outside the Punjab were located as Benaras, Vrindavan and Haridwar.

The Udāsī centres differed in size and influence, which was determined by the state patronage enjoyed by each. The Udāsī institutions had been patronized by the Mughal and the Sikh rulers. Significantly, during the reign of Maharaja Ranjit Singh, the Udāsīs received the maximum number of dharmarth grants next to the Sodhis and Bedis, who strictly speaking did not constitute religious group among the Sikhs. The British administration in Punjab initially accepted the existing religious institutions and even the individual mendicants, faqirs and ascetics in entirety and extended the existing fiscal endowments already in existence, without much change. The new rulers, like their Mughal and Sikh predecessors, expected all the grantees not only to pray for the welfare of the state or their territories, but also to enlist support in matters socio-political.

The British Government appointed special officers and they were entrusted the task to evaluate and justify the existence of religious grants sanctioned by the earlier rulers to the Udāsī individuals and the institutions. The purpose of this exercise was to check the misappropriation of funds, to seek proper allegiance of the religious establishments and to reduce the amount of grant if need be. The British records show that in many cases the officer reduced the volume of the grants and in some cases, it continued according to the old pattern, but in all the cases, it was made mandatory for the receiver to follow certain terms and conditions laid by the new government. In this way, the government could count for their support to the government.
Towards the close of the Sikh rule about seventy percent of the total \textit{Udāsī} establishments enjoyed state patronage, in addition to the grants received from several individuals. It is important to note that the majority of the \textit{Udāsī} establishments lost nearly twenty five percent of their grants in the 1850's and suffered further losses on the death of the reigning \textit{Mahants}. Even in 1881, the \textit{Udāsīs} were having larger numerical strength than any other religious group among the Sikhs and were the greater recipients of the land grants. Situation changed in early 20\textsuperscript{th} century, when the Sikhs due to the Akali-\textit{Udāsī} conflict formed Sikh Gurdwara Prabandhak Committee and the Sikh Gurdwara Act of 1925, to regain the control of the \textit{Gurdwaras} and the \textit{Darbars} from the \textit{Udāsī Mahants}. As a matter of result, the \textit{Udāsīs} made consistent efforts to disassociate themselves from the Sikhs by declaring themselves as part and parcel of the Hindus. This definitely led to the gradual decrease in the number and worth of the \textit{Udāsī} establishments having significant socio-religious and economic implications.

The paradox about the \textit{Udāsī} organization is that at the outset it looks united and cohesive but internally it was not so. Even the British records mention about the independent nature of each \textit{Udāsī} establishment. The \textit{Udāsī} institution was managed by the chief called \textit{Mahant}. On my visit to Bara Akhara Kankhal, Haridwar, I came across a published Memorandum of rules and regulations relating to the \textit{Udāsī} institutions. From the pamphlet, it appeared that a centralized Committee governed all the \textit{Udāsī} establishments within its fold which was quite contrary to the written records available at the archives. For the better understanding and the functioning of the centres, it is important to understand its genesis and the affiliation. Many \textit{Udāsī} institutions had largely come up during the time of Maharaja Ranjit Singh. Many of them were not associated with any of the \textit{Udāsī Orders} called the \textit{dhuans} or the \textit{bakshishes}. Though some of them claimed spiritual ties with parental institutions but they all functioned independently.

Institutions not affiliated with any of the \textit{Udāsī Order}, formed nearly half of the \textit{Udāsī} institutions under Sikh rule. The \textit{Mahant} managed all the affairs of the institution according to his liking or the conventions set up by his predecessors. He was the chief organizer, a spiritual guide of the disciples who visited the institution.
He had the sole authority to select and appoint his successor. The Mahant of the centre had to follow certain vows and obligations. Though, generally, he was supposed to remain celibate, but in the colonial period there are several cases of the married chelas and the Mahants too. Surprisingly, even, the women were found attached to the institutions much against the settled norm of celibacy. It was the duty of the Mahant to arrange funds for the institutions and to provide food, clothes and shelter to the inmates of the centre. He was supposed to manage langar regularly. Every Udāsī centre had its own Mahant with its chelas, gurbhais and other sadhs and attendants including musicians, granthis, cooks, and the menials. The chela was an important link between the Mahant and the followers visiting the centre. He also played an important role in collection of the funds, maintenance of the centre, to set up new centres and to spread the doctrine of the Udāsīs. Sadh was another important member of the institution after the chela, but the sadhs presence was found only in some institutions. They were largely the readers of the Granth Sahib. After the Akali-Udāsī conflict their number and importance in Udāsī establishments decreased. Some Mahants also managed dawakhanas nad pathshalas within the institution.

As per the organizational unity among the Udāsīs is concerned, it was found existing in name only. The use of word Panth for the Udāsīs implied that they had a common religious ideology and observed certain common beliefs and practices. Notwithstanding its spiritual affiliation to either a parent establishment or to a dhuan or to the bakshish, each Udāsī centre functioned independently in its administration, financial, religious and semi-religious affairs. The individual characteristic of an Udāsī institution, could be construed during the Akali-Udāsī conflict, when each Udāsī Mahant fought a lonely battle for the survival against the united Akali reformers.

In their early history during the period of Sikh Rule, the Udāsīs showed great reverence for Baba Nanak and his followers, the Nanak Panthis, and the Adi Granth. The Practice of keeping the Granth Sahib in Udāsī institutions was common. But in the changed historical situation of the early 20th century, the Udāsī Mahants began to remove the Sikh scriptures from the centres in their custody. The Udāsīs had an exceptional regard for Baba Sri Chand and Baba Gurditta, who were believed to have passed on Guruship to the adi-Udāsīs : Almast, Balu Hasna, Goinda and Phul.
Notwithstanding their reverence for Guru Nanak and the Adi Granth, the Udāsīs did not believe in the orthodox Sikh doctrine of the spiritual unity of the ten Sikh Gurus or the unity of Guruship. They subscribed to the principle of gnosis. By implication, they believed that any Udāsī who ‘experienced’ God was as good as the Gurus. Moreover, the Udāsīs believed in monism and discarded the dual-Sikh doctrine of Guru-Granth and Guru-panth. Though the Udāsīs’s interpretation of Sikhism was Vedantic, yet they were not averse to the idea of the Guru-Granth, which helped the ruling classes more than the idea of the Guru-Panth.

In their initiation ceremony, the Udāsīs differed from the Sikhs. The novice was supposed to drink the water in which the toes of five Udāsī Mahants were washed; he was to follow the teachings of Baba Sri Chand and to wear bhagvan or salmon-coloured clothes. He was to avoid two temptations: gold and women. His name was changed, and the new name generally ended with Das or Brahm. At the end of the ceremony, the sweetmeat called halva was distributed among those present. At the time of initiation, if a novitiate was ordained a Naga or a named ascetic, he was given new name Das or Sarana, suffixes which were otherwise peculiar to the vaishnava Bairagis. If the initiation was for the Paramahansa variety, the disciple received a name which ends in Ananda. The Udāsīs wore clothes “Shah, Sufaid, Zard, Surkhai, Jo Le Pahere so Gur Bhai”.

In 20th century, the Udāsīs worshipped the idol of Sri Chand and the samadhs of their Mahants, more instead of the Adi-Granth. The Hindu scriptures and the idols of Shiva or Vishnu began to be worshipped more. They also worshipped charanpadika and Nishan Sahib. The practice of worshipping the ball of ash (gole di puja) was popular among the Udāsī followers of Sangat Sahib and the Nanga Udāsī followers of Pritam Das. The Udāsīs recited some selected chbandas or couplets from their own Satotar or Panch Parmeshar immediately after their daily evening Aarti or the waving of the lamps, was over.

The Nath influence is plainly evident in some of the Udāsī ideas, customs and beliefs. They accorded a particular loyalty to the doctrines and practices of the hatha-yoga, although the respect for these doctrines extended beyond the limited Udāsī circle. The practice of constructing simple hearths (dhuni) was a Nath practice which had been appropriated by the Udāsī sadhus and subsequently the word dhuan was extended to designate Udāsī establishment. Significantly, the practice of dhuni or continuous smouldering fire was an integral feature of the earliest known Udāsī centers termed as four dhunas. Their practice of dhuni or continuous fire and belief in the practice of Hatha Yoga clearly indicate their unorthodoxy. The Udāsīs did chant the Kirtan Sohila, the Japuji and the Rehrs of the orthodox Sikhs; they chanted the Matras of Sri Chand and the various compositions of Kabir, Mira Bai and Sur Das.
For the attainment of salvation, they advocated more keenly the Hindus ways, the gyan, the karam and the bhakti Marg.

VI

The Udāsī literature consists of various forms such as the Udāsī Matre, the biographies of Baba Sri Chand; expositions of the Bani of the Sikh Gurus recorded in the Adi-Granth; the works on Udāsī doctrine and history; and the twentieth century Udāsī works which are highly polemical. Anand Ghan Udāsī’s teeke(exposition) of the bani of Sikh Gurus are available and noteworthy. The Udāsī Bodh compiled by Sant Rein towards the end of Sikh rule, appears to be more significant than any other available Udāsī work, as it sheds light on the early 19th century self-image of the Udāsīs as well as their popular attitudes, beliefs and practices. The Udāsī works by Brahmanad Udāsīn and Pritam Das Nirban written in 1920s significantly show their changing interests and attitudes as well their laxity in the observances of various beliefs and practices.

The Udāsī literature may be divided into two major sections; the first consisting of the compositions of Baba Sri Chand and others written during the eighteenth century; and the second covers the works of the nineteenth and twentieth century writers which clearly reflect the change in Udāsīs interests and attitudes in the changing historical situation. The Udāsī literature depicts social customs, practices, religious beliefs, cultural and traditional conflicts in the society. Some of the Udāsī writers like Sant Rein have condemned the prevalence of social evils in the contemporary society and hence suggested ways to improve the plight of mankind.

Some of the Udāsī poets were considerate towards women, while others condemned them. Leaving aside a few Padas of Brahmmanad and Gopal Das,generally the other Udāsī poets had presented a women as beautiful, kind, and pious human being. But, many Udāsī poets have ignored ‘Shingar Ras’, which magnified the beauty of women. The Udāsī literature clearly reflects the areas and the colloquial script used by the writers to express their feelings. As a result, we come across, the use of multilingual script, in the writings of the Ûdãsî such as Sanskrit, Punjabi, Hindi, Gujarati, Braj, Haryanvi, and Bhojpuri.

In the political sphere, the contribution of the Ûdãsî poets is appreciable. Many Ûdãsî poets were influenced by the spirit of Nationalism. Through their writings, they inculcated the feeling of patriotism among the people. Many of them openly condemned British Administration for its corrupt practices and misrule.

The Ûdãsî Mahants of the various Gurdwaras once rendered important service to the Sikh religion and Sikh community. The Ûdãsî sadhs were generally well respected as men of high moral character and integrity before the advent of the British. They were well versed in the Sikh scriptures and devoted themselves chiefly to reciting and expounding the teachings of the Sikh Gurus. Many of them established institutions, admitted chelas or followers and became heads of the deras, the akharas and the Gurdwaras as Mahants. The easy flow of money, revenue-free jagirs, given by the Sikh Misaldars and later by Maharaja Ranjit Singh and his successors, all brought a change in the style of living of some of the Mahants. They gradually adopted all sorts of corruption and vices. Idols were placed in various Gurdwaras and their worship was becoming contrary to the principles of the Sikh faith.

The Akali reformers wanted to turn the Ûdãsî Mahants out of their prestigious Sikh Shrines as they had turned these institutions into their personal properties. The increasing political consciousness and response to Nationalist upsurge throughout the country created an awakening among the people in the Punjab and also the desire among the Sikhs to reform their shrines. The Singh Sabha movement and the Chief Khalsa Diwan promoted self-consciousness and sense of independent identity among the Sikhs. Initiative for the reform was also taken by the Punjabi newspapers like the Khalsa Advocate, the Khalsa Samachar, the Khalsa Sewak and the Punjab, which began complaining about the mis-management of the Golden Temple at Amritsar and several other important Sikh Shrines at different places. The Gurdwara Reform Movement created a sense of confidence among the Indians that the British could be forced to meet their genuine demands through non-violent mass movement. It brought the Akali Dal and the Congress leadership very close to each other, giving a great impetus to the freedom movement in Punjab. The Shiromani Gurdwara Prabandhak Committee and the Akali Dal provided the institutional and organizational structure to respond to the aspirations of the newly mobilized Sikh masses. In the course of their struggle, these two bodies were not only able to obtain control over many important Sikh shrines through peaceful agitation and passive sufferings, but also to strengthen the forces of nationalism in the Punjab by ejecting the Mahants, the government appointed managers (Sarbrahs) and other vested interests in the Sikh communities. The Udâsîs in retaliation had to wage a long legal battle against the Akalis in order to save the institutions under their control. As the important Sikh shrines were being taken over by the Akalis, the Mahants of many smaller institutions either voluntarily submitted to the authority of the Shiromani Gurdwara Prabandhak Committee or were made to surrender their shrines and properties attached with them under provisions of the Sikh Gurdwaras Act of July 1925.

VIII

During the period of first seventy years from 1849 to early 1920’s, the Udâsîs witnessed considerable change in their position from all angles partly perhaps due to the impact of the Singh Sabha ideology and partly due to the direct confrontation between the Udâsî Mahants and Akali reformers during the early decades of the 20th century. Moreover, the Akali-Udâsî attempts both through courts and their literature, to prove the Sikh or non-Sikh identity or status of several institutions once under the Udâsî Mahants, further aggravated the situation, thus, affecting both the numerical strength of the Udâsîs that considerably decreased as well as the number of Udâsî centres that was either deflated or inflated by the Udâsî and Sikh writers due to their subjectivity. This may further be explained with reference to the change in the administration and the new rulers policy of partial withdrawal of the revenue-free land grants of the Udâsîs, the dilatory court cases or the civil suits, and finally, the Udâsîs’s attempts to assert their Hindu identity in the Census Reports as well. Thus, the resumption of State Patronage, the rise of Singh Sabhas, the Akali-Udâsî conflict and the Gurdwara Reform Movement and the Gurdwara litigation and legislation served a serious setback to the Udâsîs who started sending petitions to the British Government authorities requesting them to consider them as Hindus and not Sikhs.

With a view to the overall position of the Udâsîs in the colonial Punjab and their importance in the contemporary situation, W. H. Mcleod, in the last decade of 20th the century, regarded them merely as ‘historic rather than contemporary’ and more so, as ‘the palest shadow of their earlier wealth and power’. My analysis and findings in regard to the comparative state of affairs of the Udāsīs in the pre-colonial and colonial Punjab also indicate and imply, more of less, the same impression as has been well stated by an eminent western scholar of the Sikh studies. Under the new rulers, the Udāsīs witnessed a considerable change in their attitude towards the Sikhs and their scripture, Guru Granth Sahib, as well as in their numerical strength, their state patronage and the number of their centres with some laxity in their beliefs and practices, such as renunciation and asceticism.
